
Nations of Mankind: Faith, Steel & Gunpowder

Version 2.0

“Mankind, also called Men and sometimes Humans, are a race of intelligent, mammalian humanoids dominant in the Old World. The race of Men were one of the last intelligent peoples of the Warhammer World to become civilized. However, they are now one of the most powerful and populous species spread across the globe and might be considered the dominant intelligent race of the Warhammer World since the civilizations of the High Elves and the Dwarfs entered their mutual states of decline. Men are the chief devotees of the Imperial god Sigmar, as well as the primary opponent of Chaos' continued incursions into the Old World. In a severe grip of irony however, Mankind is also amongst the Dark Gods' greatest and most numerous servants.

It is a very common knowledge that the race of Men is known to be highly susceptible to the influences of Chaos. Unlike the High Elves, Mankind has only just begun the transition into a race that can fully utilize the Winds of Magic. As yet, very few humans are able to cast spells, though this number is slowly increasing as the centuries pass. However, most human wizards lack the mental discipline or inner strength to prevent themselves from causing arcane mishaps or the capability to access all the Winds of Magic simultaneously, like the greatest of the Elven Archmagi.

Humans have a highly developed brain, which is capable of abstract reasoning, language, introspection, and problem-solving. This mental capability, combined with an erect body carriage that frees the hands for manipulating objects, allowed humans to make greater use of tools, much like the other humanoid intelligent races of the Warhammer World. Other higher-level thought processes of humans, such as self-awareness, rationality, and sapience, are considered to be defining features of what constitutes a "person", though such features are shared with the other major intelligent species Men share the Warhammer World with, such as the Elves, the Dwarfs, and the Greenskins (though some might question this last one).

Like most higher primates, humans are social animals. However, humans are uniquely adept at utilizing systems of communication for self-expression, the exchange of ideas, and organization. Humans create complex social structures composed of many cooperating and competing groups, from families to nations. Social interactions between humans have established an extremely wide variety of values, social norms, and rituals, which together form the basis of human society. With humans present across the world and having adapted to every possible environment, they are currently the Warhammer World's dominant intelligent race. The current population of Men on the Warhammer World numbers in the hundreds of millions.

Humans are noted for their desire to understand and influence their environment, seeking to explain and manipulate phenomena through science, philosophy, mythology, and religion. This natural curiosity has led to the development of advanced tools and skills, which are passed down culturally, though cultural stagnation or even retrogression is possible, as the grim history of the Elder Races of the Warhammer World so readily demonstrates.”—Warhammer Wiki

Mankind is home to cultures of various nationalities across the world. While the Empire is the dominant human civilization, there are non-the-less civilizations from other realms who rise into history, with warriors of such renown their enemies fear to even whisper their names. This fan supplement for Warhammer Fantasy Roleplay 4E provides unique Careers with their own special starting Talents/Traits based on the unique lands they hail from, along with their nation exclusive Careers that make them distinct from those in the Core Book and the Empire in general. Liberties are made regarding lore for some nations lacking details and are added to provide unique mechanics based on real history and mythology. All Nation Races are intended for use for all careers, not just the homebrew careers. Reikspiel is presumed to be known to all characters, and all races are expected to know at least one of their native languages fluently. Alongside these additions brand new Talents, Religions, Lore of Magics and Trappings have been added, including a major expansion to weaponry and new mounts with availability based on its reasonable purchasable status relative to the Empire.

Regiments of the Empire

“By decree of Magnus the Pious, every province and city-state in the Empire of Man must maintain a State or Provincial Army at its own expense. Together, these regional forces make up the Imperial Army, the force that mans the Empire's fortresses, patrols the Empire's borders, repels the Empire's invaders, and, in many places, acts as local law-enforcement. These soldiers are armed with a variety of weapons, the most common being the Halberd, Sword, and Spear.

Since its existence, the Empire of Man has always been a nation born and bred for war, fighting off foes uncountable with the will, the steel, and the faith of their patriotic citizenry. With an unending chain of constant warfare, the armies of the Empire are brimmed with grizzled Veterans of many campaigns, each one lead by an even greater man of strength, valor and heroic leaderships. As their nation progress throughout the centuries, innovations and inventions were re-engineered for the use of warfare, with the armies of the Empire now stockpiled with large quantities of devastating black-powder weaponry and the technological marvels of the 25th century.”—Warhammer Wiki

Through centuries of blood and war, each province has perfected its own unique forms of warfare, each with regiments of renown specializing in different weaponry, tactics and cultures. They are shaped just as much by the heraldry and traditions of their home province as they are by the grim realities of war. While the Empire is a unified force of man and order against the dangers of Chaos, it is its many parts, from Reikland to Ostland, spread across its many provinces that gives it its true edge. It's its military reflects that quality the most.

These bonuses are granted to those who select the Soldier Career in the WFRP 4E Core Book (pg. 115) and dedicate themselves to a specific province of the Empire. The bonuses increase as the Soldier PC progresses in their career, starting from Recruit to Officer. Please consult the GM before making any homebrew modifications towards your character. Your character must originate from the Empire and their respective Province, with the exception of Marienburg, to qualify for these Regimental bonuses.

All Lore Skills and Talents granted to the soldier by their Regiment are treated as if added to their Career and may be purchased and advanced as normal. If you leave your Regiment under any conditions, such as being discharged or changing Careers, you maintain all additional Skills and Talent advances; however, you will not be eligible to join or maintain employment with any special unit in the Regiments of Renown section, with the exception of Marienburg who hires anyone.

Regiments of Renown

While most Empire troops wear their provincial or city-state colors, there are notable exceptions that do not follow this tradition. Some regiments have performed legendary feats on past battlefields that are forever commemorated by a symbolic change of uniform design or color. Other unorthodox formations adopt the style of a maverick leader or develop their own heritage over the course of long campaigning. Age-old enemies, unique fighting tactics, or even a chance to embellish their own mythic reputation have all been reason enough for regiments to adopt non-standard colors and symbols.

At your third Career level, some provinces gain the option for you to enlist in a special Regiment based on your skill, performance or reputation on the battlefield, and possibly your Province of origin, providing you an additional Talent to purchase and a unique trapping upon enlistment. However, your Career 3 rank is reverted to Soldier, as you are abandoning a potential promotion as a Sergeant to join a more elite unit, but your Social Status for Career 3 remains the same. You will still have access to all Skills and Talents available at Career 3 and 4, including the Regiment Skills and Talents from your home province, but you gain none of the Trappings received at Career 3 and you still receive orders on the same level as a Career 2 Soldier. You will regain your authority once you progress to Career 4 as an Officer, and all Trappings as listed are granted as normal.

Some special Regiments only recruit locally, while others recruit anyone who has proven themselves in a way sufficient enough to be worthy of enlisting. It is the GM's discretion as to who, why and how the PC is allowed to join.

Knightly Orders of the Empire

“The Knightly Orders of the Empire are a heroic brotherhood of armored warriors who ride into battle atop mighty barded warhorses and sometimes other, more exotic creatures into battle. Knights are magnificent figures, clad in gleaming Full Plate Armor crafted by Dwarfen smiths, armed with weaponry of the finest quality. To become a Knight is also to become one of the most elite warriors the Empire has to offer.

Because the cost of individual knightly training is prohibitively expensive, many sons of the Imperial nobility choose to join one of the many brotherhoods located throughout the Empire to progress through society, and as such, the Knightly Orders come in many different shape and sizes. Some of these Orders, like the Knights Griffon, only recruit from the local nobility, while others become templars of a particular Imperial deity, such as the zealous Knights of Sigmar's Blood or the Knights of the White Wolf. Some are well known throughout the Empire, while others are quite small, relatively unknown sects valiantly doing their part to make the Empire a safer place for Men to live.

Although the common people might find little distinction between the many Knight Orders of the Empire, upon closer observation, one will realize that there are two distinct types of Knightly Orders within the Empire itself. These types are divided between the common Secular Orders (An Order of Knights with no specific allegiance to a Ruler or Religion), and a Templar Order (An Order founded for the purpose of servitude to a particular god).”

These bonuses are granted to those who select the Knight Career in the WFRP 4E Core Book (pg. 111) and dedicate themselves to a specific order of knights. The bonuses increase as the Knight PC progresses in their career, starting from Squire to Knight of the Inner Circle. Please consult the GM before making any homebrew modifications towards your character. Your character must originate from the Empire to qualify for these Orders.

All Lore and Melee Skills, and Talents, granted to the knight by their Orders are treated as if added to their Knight Career and may be purchased and advanced as normal. If you leave your Order under any conditions, such as being excommunicated or leaving of your own will, you lose the ability to purchase the Talents available from your Order if not already purchased—similar to if you left your Career. If your Order grants you a special ability at your 4th Career Level as Knight of the Inner Circle and you leave, you lose the ability until you reenter your Knightly Order.

Medals & Honors of the Empire

Each Province of the Empire has its own, unique military traditions and structure, its own battlefield conditions and foes to fight. To reflect this, each Province has their own customs, ceremonies and awards for the men and women who serve the Empire from Soldiers and Cavalrymen, to Witch Hunters, or even Knights of particular skill, heroism, or stubborn tenacity. Man's allies are not exempt from these honors, as many a Dwarf, Elf, Halfling and even Ogre have received their fair share of accommodations and celebrations for their service. From the noblest of Elven Sorcerer or Dwarfen Engineer to the rowdiest of Tilean Mercenaries or Ogre Maneaters, the Empire has made sure to award its most faithful allies.

Included below are those commendations unique to the Empire. These medals and honors are a tradition within the Empire's legacy dating back centuries and represent meritorious service against the main foes of the Mankind: The mutants that infest the forests and underbellies of all Empire towns and villages, the Orc hordes invading from the South in the Badlands, the Dark Elf corsairs and Norscan Marauders raiding from the Sea of Claws, those Chaos Warbands from the North that call the Chaos Wastes their home, and the Beastmen Warherds active in the Drakwald Forest. These are but a few of the innumerable threats that the Empire must face every day and have done so for over 2500 years.

Additionally, there are informal awards, marks of reputation rather than formal commendation, given by Imperial command. These honors are often recognized by a given Empire officer, knight or noble lord to acknowledge a warrior's skill and history fighting one of Mankind's many foes.

Kill Counts, War Trophies & Titles

For many warriors, each victory is accompanied by a simple ritual: a notch on a weapon or piece of armor, or a trophy from a fallen foe, a count for every enemy killed in service to the Empire. These simple counts add up over time, to eventually become a full-fledged part of the warrior's identity, fully incorporated in their heraldry and status. As a warrior moves through the ranks, their reputations as a fearsome fighter of a given enemy grows, eventually adding to their legendary reputation on the battlefield.

These counts are collectively known as Kill Counts. Kill Counts are an informal honor, which means they hold no physical indication of accomplishments unlike medals, with the exception of trophies. Kill Counts in the form of trophies can be anything from a foe's weapon, armor, trinket or even their skull and other various body parts. Kill Counts are a part of the reputation of the warrior and are more a measure of their respect and status among knights, priests and soldiers, both within the Empire and among its enemies, than an adornment for a uniform.

Kill Counts are a form of recognition for victory in battles, for causing damage and destruction to the goals and forces of a given adversary of the Empire. As such, Kill Counts are generally recognized after a certain number of successful battles or quests against a given foe. Optionally, the GM may wish to keep a running tally of every confirmed kill made by the warrior and have Kill Counts be a true count of the death toll the warrior has inflicted on the forces arrayed against the Empire of Mankind.

Kill Counts are always applied to a particular enemy of the Empire. The types of Enemies represented by Kill Counts have to do with the creature, species or nation of the enemy type. Each of the major types of enemies and adversaries active within the Empire is an acceptable type of antagonist to be recognized by Kill Counts, which is normally a group of people or creatures, such as 'Rebels', 'Beastmen', 'Orcs', or 'Outlaws'.

Everyone records their Kill Counts differently. Counts may be written down in journals, painted onto a shield, notched into weapons, represented with elaborate body scars or tattoos, or displayed as a myriad of trophies hanging from banners, mounts, or armor.

Each type of Kill Count gives the warrior bonuses for fighting their adversaries, and additionally marks the warrior as an implacable foe of one of the Empire's many hated enemies.

Hunter

The warrior has become recognized and adept at rooting out a particular adversary of the Empire. Over the course of their adventures, the warrior has learned to recognize the telltale signs of one of the Empire's enemies and can recognize common battle tactics, tracks and other signs of their presence in the area.

The warrior has likely developed a reputation throughout their current area as a skilled combatant against a given foe. They will often be given a nickname based off the foe they face: "Orc Seeker," "Gor Hunter," or "Bandit Catcher," for only a few examples. The GM and player are encouraged to come up with an appropriate appellation for any warrior that receives this status, based on their career and the specifics of their exploits.

Requirements: The warrior has been blooded against a particular enemy of the Empire, with a few successful encounters against that adversary under their belt. Optionally, the GM might wish to keep a full tally of the enemies they have killed. If this is the case, this Kill Count is awarded for 50 or more confirmed kills of a given enemy of the Empire by the character.

Bonuses: You are well versed in discerning the movements, trails and patterns for the given enemy. You gain a +10 bonus to Perception and Psychology Tests related to the specific enemy on your travels (such as Tests to track them and Tests to avoid Surprise or Fear in combat).

Killer

The warrior has slain many of a given foe, and the locals in power have taken notice. Just as with other Kill Counts, the warrior is likely to have gained a reputation. The character is likely known throughout its current area with a nickname like "Wrecker Killer" or "Zombie Butcher."

Requirements: The warrior has been an implacable foe of this enemy. Award this honor for successfully completing two or more adventures against a given adversary. Optionally, the GM can award the character this honor for 100 or more confirmed kills of a given enemy by the warrior.

Bonuses: You have experienced first-hand the behaviors and tactics of your foe and can now begin to predict their behaviors and exploit their idiosyncrasies. You gain a +10 to any Intelligence Tests having to do with the chosen enemy, including and especially Lore Tests. Additionally, you are extremely adept at combating your specific enemy and gain a bonus of +1 SL on all combat Tests against the specified threat.

Reaper

The warrior has developed a reputation throughout the Province, or even the Empire, as an expert fighter against a certain threat, and might be treated to such hushed sobriquets as “Goblin Slayer,” “Chaos Render,” “Morr’s Right Hand,” or “Sigmar’s Justice.” More likely than not, the character and their party has also developed a reputation with the enemy themselves, and might even be picked out for ambushes, targeted for assassination, or face other such reactive measures whenever their presence becomes known to their foes.

Requirements: The warrior has slaughtered scores of enemies of the Empire. Award this Kill Count for having successfully completed five or more adventures against a particular foe. Optionally, the GM can award this Kill Count if the character has decimated the enemy forces in numerous engagements, likely over the course of years or decades, and has earned 300 or more confirmed kills against this foe.

Bonuses: You have faced this enemy in innumerable battles, and your combat prowess against this foe has become legendary. You know exactly how the enemy behaves, and how and where to hit that enemy when it is weakest. You inflict a bonus +1 Damage when attacking the chosen enemy and the Fearless (Enemy Type) Talent is added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Additionally, the enemy has learned to fear you and the tales around you. You gain a +10 to Intimidation Tests and the Fear (1) Trait against any enemy who is aware of your fearsome reputation. For every +100 additional confirmed kills of the specific enemy your Fear Rank increases by 1. If you have been particularly effective at routing, slaying and disrupting the plans of a specific faction within the many enemy races of Order (such as a Chaos cult, Skaven clan or a particular tribe of Greenskins or Beastmen), the GM might wish to give those enemies the Hatred Psychology against you to properly reflect their sworn vendettas and oaths of vengeance.

Imperial Honors

Imperial Honors are gallantry medals awarded by the lords and ladies within the various Provinces for service to the Empire “fighting in the name of the emperor and Sigmar himself.” Considering how much leaders often expect out of the average soldier or citizen, receipt of one of these honors is a rare moment, indeed. These medals are considered very important, and their titles are long-winded. For example, the full title of the Iron Comet would be, “For Distinguished Service, Against the Enemies of Mankind and the God of the Empire, Iron Comet Medal.” Imperial Honors are usually very large and ostentatious, though there is considerable variance in this regard. Receipt of these medals does not go unnoticed by the soldiery, priesthoods, knightly orders or nobility. Imperial Honors are always awarded for specific feats of bravery and skill; each one is often accompanied by a scar and a story. The average man or dwarf warrior will often ask the bearers to recount their tales of bygone battles, partly out of curiosity and a sense of camaraderie, but also in the hopes that they might pick up a few helpful pointers along the way.

Medal Notes: Talents given by medals only apply to the initial receiver of the medal and non-Talent bonuses cannot be obtained by those who have not earned the medal themselves, however the medal must still be worn by the initial receiver. All medals can be identified with an Easy (+40) Skill Test using Lore (Empire), Lore (Heraldry), Lore (History), or other similar Skills. Characters with Careers in the Courtier and Warrior Class may roll an Average (+20) Intelligence Test to know if they recognize any medal. Fake medals can be detected with an Evaluate Test by anyone with the Numismatics Talent with the difficulty determined by the GM. The punishment of being caught using a fake medal is different within each Province but is often life imprisonment, forced service in the local army or militia, or simply death.

Artillerist’s Honors

The Artillerist’s Honors is given to those heroes of the Empire who have decimated their way through enemy lines and into the true heart of invading armies from a distance with the expert use of artillery pieces—ballistae, cannons, etc. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from the engineers, artillerists and soldiers of the Empire, as soldiers are the most affected by frontline warfare preferring to deal with as few combatants as possible, while engineers and artillery crews are quick to impress with well-placed, calculated shots and good use of their siege equipment.

Description: A gold medallion with the image of a cannon etched on top.

Awarded For: 200 Confirmed kills using siege weapons and the destruction of a Chaos Dwarf, Ogre or Skaven engine of war.

Bonuses: +10 to Lore Tests related to Armory, Construction, Engineering and Explosives, and the wearer gains a bonus of +10 to Ranged (Engineering) Tests when using siege equipment.

Black Raven

The Black Raven is given to those heroes of the Empire who have vanquished massive amounts of Undead abominations and helped stem the tide of rotten flesh by destroying their vampire and necromancer masters. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from Morrians, who cherish the preservation and respect for the dead above all else—with necromancy being the worst means of desecration.

Description: A silver medallion inlaid with black gemstone and the image of a raven etched in with a skull in its center.

Awarded For: Slaying at least 200 Undead and at least one powerful Undead warrior, such as a Blood Knight, Ghoul King, Necromancer, or Vampire Noble.

Bonuses: The wearer of this medal’s melee attacks against Undead gain the Damaging Weapon Quality, and the wearer gains a bonus of +10 to all Psychology Tests related to Undead. If the melee weapon already has Damaging it is replaced with the Impact Quality instead when striking Undead. If you do not have the Coolheaded Talent already, it will be added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Bronze Stag

The Bronze Stag is given to those heroes of the Empire who have hunted down and slain a great monstrous beast and protected the people from its ravenous wrath using Taal’s favored method, the bow. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from Taal’s followers and any huntsmen regardless of the god they serve.

Description: A bronze medallion with the image of a stag etched on top.

Awarded For: Slaying a mighty Size (Monstrous) creature by yourself using only a bow.

Bonuses: The wearer of this medal's ranged bow attacks against Animals and Monsters gain the Damaging Weapon Quality. If the bow already has Damaging it is replaced with the Impact Quality instead. If you do not have the Marksman Talent already, it will be added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Golden Eagle

The Golden Eagle is given to those heroes of the Empire who have displayed and proven their unmatched tactical and military knowledge on the battlefield. In the face of overwhelming opposition on all sides, the Empire cannot afford the same losses in war as their enemies from Greenskins to the Undead, who can replenish quickly. It takes a strong tactical mind to earn a place in high command and even more so to maintain their office. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from Myrmidians, military officers and high-ranking Imperial officials.

Description: A gold medallion with a silver trim and the image of an eagle clutching a spear with its talons etched on top.

Awarded For: An extreme act of tactical or military brilliance on the battlefield that either allows for a major victory against a vastly superior foe (numbers, war gear, champions, etc.) with minimal to no losses or greatly turns the tide of battle from defeat to victory.

Bonuses: +10 to all Lore Tests related to Warfare, and the wearer of this medal's melee attacks using a polearm gain the Precise Weapon Quality. If you do not have the Sharp Talent already, it will be added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Iron Comet

This Iron Comet is awarded for spearheading an act of Sigmar's will to end a threat to the Empire by cutting off the heads of their leaders—archenemies well known to the God of the Empire, predominantly servants of Chaos, Greenskins and Undead. These champions and warlords are heavily relied upon by their warbands, cults or clans, and their loss is a devastating blow to the enemy. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from Sigmarites regardless of social status, from nobles and priests, to the common folk and peasants of the Empire devoted to Sigmar.

Description: An iron medallion with the image of the Twin Tailed Comet etched on top and a red gemstone inserted in its center.

Awarded For: Slaying a powerful and dangerous Daemon, Greenskin or Undead champion such as a Daemon Lord of Chaos, Greenskin Warboss, Master Necromancer or Vampire Lord in melee combat.

Bonuses: The medal wearer's melee attacks against Daemons, Greenskins and Undead gain the Damaging Weapon Quality. Any warhammers (the signature weapon of Sigmar) or swords you wield gain +1 Damage with this medal equipped. If you do not have either the Warrior Born or Very Strong Talent already, one may be added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Magnus Cross

The Magnus Cross is the most famous and widely recognized medal in the Empire. It was first issued during the reign of Magnus the Pious under its original name as the "Imperial Cross" but has since been renamed in his honor since the great emperor's death. It was originally awarded to Magnus' personal honor guard during the Great War Against Chaos and has been used ever since to reward those who would lay down their lives to protect the Empire's greatest leaders from the innumerable threats they face daily. A character with this medal can expect the highest amount of respect from the vast majority of Imperial citizens, nobles and military officials across the Empire, regardless of social status.

Description: A black cross made of obsidian gemstone, with a gold trim and a golden skull wearing a civic crown in its center.

Awarded For: Preserving the Empire by protecting an Imperial figure of great importance from harm, such as an Elector Count or the Emperor (with their knowledge of your actions, of course).

Bonuses: Whenever the wearer of this medal inflicts a Critical Hit against a Greenskin, Servant of Chaos or Undead, you may roll twice on the Critical Wounds Table and pick the higher result. Greenskins, Servants of Chaos and Undead may not ignore the Critical Wound under any circumstances (unless they successfully dodge it with an Opposed Dodge Test), including spending a Fate Point, using Critical Deflection or having the Impenetrable Armor Quality. The Resistance (Corruption) Talent is added to the Talent list of any career you are in, and any bonus effects for Tests you gain from your Status are doubled with any Imperials who respect Status.

Martyr's Medal

This medal is awarded to the grizzled and scarred veterans of the Empire, from the common swordsman to the militiamen and mercenaries that aid their local Provinces in their time of need, and payed the price for it. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from the militia locals, mercenaries, soldiers and law enforcement of the Empire, retired or active in their duties.

Description: A bronze medallion with silver filigree and the image of a cracked skull etched on top.

Awarded For: An act of true bravery and sacrifice in the name of the Empire in the face of overwhelming odds and certain death to protect its people, so great it results in the loss of limbs or causes permanent mental scarring. Acts may include defending a village from an onslaught of Beastmen that overwhelm the defenders three to one, or a raid on an Orc encampment to break the back of a possible Orc invasion on a nearby town just to name a few examples.

Bonuses: Whenever the wearer of this medal is required to make a Fear or Terror Test, they may spend a Fortune Point to automatically pass that Test with +Willpower Bonus SL and the Fearless (Any) Talent is added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Medal of Destiny

The Medal of Destiny is awarded is awarded for completing perilous deeds in the name of the Empire's most trusted and loyal subjects. Formed during the days of Magnus the Pious, the Medal of Destiny was created to reward only the most dedicated and loyal within the Empire's citizenry. Those who accept the near impossible tasks given are awarded with not only the medal and undying gratitude of the Province's officials, but a guaranteed promise of citizenship within the Empire and immediate elevation to noble status, the only medal of its kind to grant such. Due to its high value thanks to its promises of citizenship and noble status, it was decided that only the most carefully selected and tested noble officials within the Empire should be capable of awarding this medal to back up its legitimacy and avoid a complicated criminal element. These medals are forged by smiths from the Gold Order and as such are commonly tested by local Metal Wizards to be verified, in case a conman tries to act cheeky and flaunt their non-existent accomplishments and bogus status.

Description: A gold medallion encrusted with gemstones in the colors of the local Province and the seal of a noble house etched on top.

Awarded For: Accomplishing perilous and borderline suicidal missions granted by an official of high esteem within the Empire, so dangerous you would have most likely needed divine aid to have survived.

Bonuses: The wearer of this medal gains 1 AP on the Body, and the Luck and Noble Blood Talents are added to the Talent list of any career you are in. If the AP is Damaged, it takes until sunrise the following day for it to recover.

Meteoric Medal

The Meteoric Medal is an ancient—possibly the oldest—honor ever given from Dwarf to Mankind since the foundation of the Empire. Only the greatest allies to the Dwarf Clans and their lords are even considered for this honor, which is less a medal and more a runic artifact crafted with the insignia of the clan who forges it. This honor proves to the Dwarfs one who is worthy of their respect, regardless of their beard length. No Dwarf would dare speak ill of anyone showing this medal in their presence and would sooner take the Slayer Oath than disrespect one who has aided the Dwarfs so honorably in these dark times.

Description: A gromril medallion carved into the head of Grungni, the Dwarf god of artistry, metalwork and mining, and emblazoned with a clan insignia and a glowing rune on the back side of the medal.

Awarded For: Preserving the ancient oath of friendship between Man and Dwarf, or proving yourself an ally to their cause through other means, by committing an act of great heroism in their name, such as: aiding them in discovering and reclaiming a long lost dwarf hold, returning ancient sacred Dwarfen artifacts, or crossing off the name of one of the Dwarf's greatest enemies from the Great Book of Grudges itself.

Bonuses: The wearer of this medal gains a Ward (9+) Creature Trait (WHFRP 4E Core Book, page 343) against all attacks and spells targeting you. Each hit successfully saved increases the Ward's effectiveness by 1, to a maximum of Ward (6+). The Ward resets back to 9+ at the end of an encounter or if the medal is removed.

Platinum Owl

The Platinum Owl is given to those heroes of the Empire who have dispatched justice so effectively within the Empire as to root out corruption and purge major internal struggles ripping apart the Empire from within. Be it in a court room, a dueling arena or through thorough investigation and espionage, those who expose and expunge the malign influences that threaten the political structure of the Empire are more than worthy of this medal. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from Verena's followers and law officials like judges, lawyers, scholars, bailiffs, watchmen, road wardens and even some witch hunters.

Description: A platinum medallion carved in the shape of an owl's head with a golden sword and scale in its center.

Awarded For: A wise act of justice that roots out and destroys the corruption eating away at the Empire by reporting, exposing and possibly executing a corrupt individual of great social and political status.

Bonuses: +10 to Lore Tests related to History, Law, Politics and Theology. If you do not have the Savvy Talent already, it will be added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Pure Soul Medal

The Pure Soul Medal is given to the most pious and favored of the gods commonly worshipped within the Empire, from Patron Gods like Sigmar to the Classical Gods of the North and South from Ulric to Myrmidia. This medal is of such importance it is only awarded by Arch Lectors to the most righteous and dogmatic of religious fanatics within the Empire—not so fanatical as to be suicidal like the flagellants mind you, but equally as spirited and financially viable to their local temple. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from the followers of their dominant religion and all priests and cultists, regardless of their faith, so long as their followers don't hold a rivalry or animosity towards one another, similar to Ultricians and Sigmartites.

Description: A gold medallion, inlaid with iron and the image of a hammer etched in, with a silver skull in the hammer's head.

Awarded For: An act of extreme piety, one that proves unmistakably you are a fervent and loyal follower of your deity in the eyes your god and their servants. Recovering long lost religious artifacts, successfully launching a crusade against enemies of a given deity or going on a years-long spiritual journey across the Old World, aiding as many temples as possible enough for word to reach the Arch Lectures of the various faiths.

Bonuses: +10 to Pray Tests and the Pure Soul Talent is added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Rat Slayer Commendation

The Rat Slayer Commendation is unofficially known in private circles within the Imperial military and upper nobility as the "Skaven Slayer Commendation." This medal is awarded to brave souls who risk their lives fighting the nefarious ratmen, without the luxuries of decent compensation or gratitude that benefit butchering better known threats to the Empire. This medal was created in honor of Mandred von Zelt, also known as Mandred Skavenslayer, one of the greatest Emperors in the Empire's history who pulled humanity out of the Black Death in the 12th Century IC, and a powerful champion of Ulric who devastated the Skaven in the ensuing wars against them. Most of the population will not recognize this emblem without prior knowledge of the Skaven, as is the intention of its design to keep attention towards it low. It will often be looked upon as a cheap, ugly piece of jewelry. However, within the right groups amongst the Imperial elite and revealing the heraldry of House Zelt on its back, many will acknowledge the medal wearer as a venerated champion of the Empire, but none will mention the word "Skaven" without caution.

Description: An iron medallion, inlaid with bronze with the image of a rat's head with two 'X' marks over its eyes, and the heraldry of House Zelt emblazoned onto the back of the medal.

Awarded For: Slaying at least 200 Skaven and a powerful Skaven champion, such as a Grey Seer Lord, Master Assassin, Master Moulder, Warlock Chief Engineer or Warlord.

Bonuses: The wearer of this medal's melee attacks against Rats and Skaven gain the Damaging Weapon Quality, and the wearer gains a bonus of +10 to all Psychology Tests related to Rats and Skaven. If the melee weapon already has Damaging it is replaced with the Impact Quality instead when striking Skaven.

Sacred Fire Medal

The Sacred Fire Medal is awarded for eliminating a shadowy insurgent cell responsible for death, dissent and turmoil within the Empire. Things like secret Chaos cults, ambitious revolutionaries and hidden clans of nefarious ratmen are the fuel that keep the fires of Chaos expanding. Without these secretive, malevolent threats plaguing, killing and corrupting the people from within their communities, the growth of Chaos influence staggers or secedes.

Description: A gold medallion encrusted with red gemstones and emblazoned with a red gem encrusted skull surrounded by flames.

Awarded For: Purging one of the Empire's large towns or cities by wiping out an entire underground network of its enemies, such as a Chaos Cult, Rebel Cell or a lesser Skaven Clan.

Bonuses: Wearers of this medal regain +1 Wound per hour and the Implacable Talent is added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Silver Wolf

This Imperial Honor is awarded for spearheading an act of Ulric's will by challenging and cutting off the head of a powerful champion deemed worthy by the followers of the White Wolf. Archenemies well known to the temples of Ulric and Middenland consist of Beastmen, Greenskins and Mutants. These champions, warlords and cult leaders are heavily relied upon by their warbands, cults or clans, and their loss is a devastating blow to the enemy. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from Ultricians regardless of social status, from nobles and priests, to the common folk and peasants of the Empire devoted to Ulric.

Description: A silver medallion carved in the shape of a wolf's head with its features etched in.

Awarded For: Slaying a powerful and dangerous Beastman, Greenskin or Mutant champion such as a Beastlord, Chaos Cult Leader, or Greenskin Warboss in melee combat.

Bonuses: The medal wearer's melee attacks against Beastmen, Greenskins and Mutants, gain the Damaging Weapon Quality. Any warhammers or axes (the signature weapons of Ulric) you wield gain +1 Damage with this medal equipped. If you do not have either the Warrior Born or Very Resilient Talent already, one may be added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Orders, Decoration and Medals of Sweden, Unknown Date

White Dove

The White Dove is given to those heroes of the Empire who have prioritized the preservation and safety of life over merely taking it in battle. It takes more than firepower and strategic planning to win wars, and nothing is more valuable in conflict than the health of the soldiers and citizens fighting in them every day. Be it through curing crippling wounds, plague or combat fatigue, those who spend their days saving the lives of the Empire's people are more than deserving of this medal. A character showing this medal can expect respect and appreciation from Shallya's followers and healers such as medics, physicians, jade wizards and apothecaries.

Description: A silver medallion inlaid with white gemstone and the image of a dove etched in with a blood drop in its center.

Awarded For: Purity and altruism that saves the lives of at least 100 people through acts of physical, emotional or spiritual healing.

Bonuses: +10 to Heal Tests and the Field Dressing Talent is added to the Talent list of any career you are in. If you have the Field Dressing Talent already, the Surgery Talent is added instead.

Almogavar

Human Estalian

The Estalian common folk are accustomed to war. Ever since the evil Caliph Jaffar invaded their land, Estalian shepherds found few options for survival within the harsh mountains bordering Brettonia and Tilea. The easiest one became that which their forefathers had been forced to by the previous kings and nobles: That of raiding and pillaging. And soon after, there was not a single Estalian shepherd that had not grown up sullyng his blade once.

Estalian Almogavars (a term coined by the Arabyans, meaning “Rioters”) became an essential part of the reconquering efforts by the Estalian kingdoms, often employing these warbands as mobile light infantry to supplement their own rigid formations. These men came from all walks of life and joined a “Compañía”, lead at first by charismatic or veteran individuals with tactical knowledge. These took part in battle by harassing the enemy position with well-placed javelin throws and forcing encounters with enemy infantry on uneven terrain. Outside of battle, their pillaging expertise put the tales of Tilean raiders to shame, destroying the ability for the Caliph to retain his stranglehold on the Peninsula.

After these reconquering efforts began their decline, these men became mercenaries in a similar vein to those found in Tilean society, still serving the many remaining baronies, duchies and kingdoms within Estalia and fighting their battles. Their composition became much more professional, the “Compañías” forming their own sense of identity and unity amongst themselves and in-between. The leaders of these groups, now known as “Adalid”, became lower noblemen within Estalian society, capable of fielding a military power that, while not threatening to major stability, could cause major damage.

These mercenaries found themselves travelling far beyond the reaches of Estalia and Tilea, wandering over the northernmost icy forests of Kislev, the quibbles and disputes of the Border Princes, the silky sands of Araby and the fearsome jungles of the New World. While bound to their lieges and their kingdom first, these “Compañías” value the survival of their companionship second... and the glint of gold and coin third. And, even though they may seem less illustrious and meritorious than their Tilean counterparts, it is wise to remember this old Estalian proverb:

“Más has bien de reirte de nos, burlarte de nos y hartarte de nos... pero has bien de no engañar a nos, o habrá de nos de quemar a ceniza la fortuna de vos” (You’d do well in laughing at us, mocking us and being fed up with us... but you’d do well in not cheating us, or we will burn your fortunes to ash).

Artillerist

Dwarf, Gnome, Halfling, Human

“The Artillerist is skilled at operating all manner of siege weapons, from the ballista to the trebuchet, and even gunpowder devices like the cannon, mortar and Hellblaster Volley Gun of the Imperial arsenal. Field repairs are often necessary when a wheel breaks or a gun carriage cracks, and a smart Artillerist quickly learns how to make temporary repairs to ensure minimal interruption in firing rate. Artillerists rely on teamwork and command groups of Engineers to operate their weapons effectively. They are rarely found outside of a large army.

Part Engineer, part Soldier, and all target, Artillerists must learn to take care of themselves on the battlefield. Generally, they are far enough behind the battle lines to be out of danger, but the effectiveness of their weaponry makes them favorite targets for enemy missile fire, flying creatures, and magical attacks. Also, moving the various engines around is hard work under the best of conditions; over muddy, rutted, rock-strewn battlefields it can be an endurance test with lives hanging in the balance. The career of an Artillerist is not all glory, as is frequently supposed.

An Artillerist lives and dies on the battlefield by his skill in operating and maintaining his gun. Because of this, an Artillerist is taught to put nothing above the care of his gun. He obsessively cleans and maintains it, practices often and polishes it until it shines. Some Artillerists go so far as to give their guns female names and talk or even sing to them. This has led to most state troop regiments regarding Artillerists as more than a little strange. Of course, as long as the big guns keep firing, they are not going to complain.”—Warhammer Wiki “Wot? Wot? You’ll have to speak louder, lad? The cannons are barkin’ fierce today.”

—Anonymous Artillerist

“These immense guns form the backbone of an artillery battery, hurling solid balls of iron into the enemy, ripping through ranks and devastating formations. Armour is no protection against a cannon ball and the effect a well-aimed salvo can have on tightly packed regiments cannot be underestimated.”
—Excerpt from Machineries of Destruction – The Manifold Methods of Maiming the Mass and the Mob on the Field of Battle, by Master Engineer Hallar Hansleben of Wissenland

Assassin

Halfing, Human

Politics is a dangerous enough profession on its own, from external to internal threats it seems like everyone is out to wither take your job or your life—or both! No better example of this can be found outside the republics and principalities in Tilea and the Border Princes, where poisonings and power grabs are as common as breathing in the everyday lives of their nobility and political representatives. Who carries out these deeds? Well, when you need someone with finesse, you contract someone with equal parts class and quality—the Assassins.

From the port city of Remas to the fortress city of Miragliano, just about any territory was home to these expert killers. From humble beginnings they started out as independent contract killers, no different from the protagonists of the Empire and beyond, offering mercenary officers and lesser nobility for their rivals; however, as the political game evolved, so too did the strategies of the assassins. Private security was getting tougher, guards were more prepared, nobles were leaving themselves far less exposed in public places, and the super wealthy and influential started living in fortress mansions designed to fight off small armies. Something had to be done, and the assassins kept finding a way: smooth talking the relatives and family of the victims for weaknesses and information, bribing guards, disguising as servants and even night time assaults while they slept, sneaking in under the cover of dark became the new methods of murder—and have been quite successful.

Assassins guilds began to surface housing across all of Tilea, and over the course of centuries into the neighboring lands of Estalia, Bretonnia, Sartosa, Araby and the Empire as well. These foreign headquarters are run and operated by members of their respective local population. There is much variety in the different sects from the Hashashiyah of Araby to the Hermandad de Asesinos in Estalia, but they nonetheless follow the same methods of assassination. Their weapons are unique and varied amongst each other, and their connections with foreign sects make it easier when traveling to gather information and equipment when taking contracts that require crossing borders. Not all assassins follow the guilds, as many members found it more profitable to take on independent ventures, some even starting their own assassination enterprises and spreading their teachings and methodology to the highest bidder.

The most famous assassin of them all is none other than Lucrezia Belladonna, a woman of such beauty and power it is said she might be the most beautiful woman in all of the Old World—and is as deadly as she is beautiful. She is rumored to be the one who poisoned the legendary Borgio the Besieger along with over half a dozen of her former husbands, and has on more than one occasion embarrassed no shortage of Bretonnian knights challenging claims towards her beauty, with many a jousting matches running a foul with knights slumping over dead not long after being hit by the opponent's lance.

“... and soon he slumped over his steed, dead. None could decipher how this occurred. A true tragedy had befallen the Bretonnians as their champion lay breathless—the crowd cheering from the stands as the sultry beauty herself, Lucrezia, kissed the tip of the lance of the victor, infuriating the knights. It is said she kissed more than one lance that day.”—Tilean Newsprint

Beast Tamer

Human Indan

The exotic lands of Ind hold many beasts and monsters never before seen to the people of the west: tigers, elephants and panthers are but a taste of what Ind has to offer. With nature and man being so closely intertwined it is no wonder that over the ages many have attempted to tame these creatures. Perhaps it was for the fame and glory, the power of controlling such beasts, or something more benign and simpler as building a friendship with nature itself. The intentions of the Beast Tamers are as varied as any other profession, but one thing is clear—they are among the few who can successfully control nearly any creature once they’ve fully peaked and mastered the art of taming.

Best Tamers can be found in a large variety of locations. They serve as entertainers, warriors, scouts, hunters and so much more for their respective kingdoms. Those of higher status and renown are often invited to the courts of the many nobles and rulers of the various kingdoms of Ind, to display their talents and their animal companions with compensation afterwards. The warrior Beast Tamers ride in to battle on their various mounts, leading ferocious charges that break the lines of enemy armies, routing and ensuing fear and terror into the hearts of those who’d dare stand in their way. Lavished in gifts of gold and silk, Beastmasters represent the pinnacle of the skill a Beast Tamer can achieve having gained control of a mighty monster capable of being broken and mounted.

Kislev has priests of Ursun capable of taming bears. The Empire has its legendary Demigryph knights. Bretonnia has its Hippogryph and Pegasus knights. Ind has its war elephants. Little is known about their exact methods but is said some Beastmasters go so far as to control manticores and even dragons. The people of Ind are unique indeed.

“... ‘an then he grappled the ting’ to the ground and collared it! Can you believe that!? Aye, it happened. Next thing ya know, the next mornin’ the bloody boar was listenin’ to ‘is commands and performin’ tricks! The week after that it was fightin’ alongside us an’ scarin’ off the goblins that tried ambushin’ our camp.” -- Agmaurdrer Truearm, Dwarf Peddler

Black Cap

Human Wastelander

“Officially known as the Honourable Company of Lamplighters and Watchmen, Marienburg's city Watch is better known for the distinctive floppy black hats they wear. They are charged with the protection of property and public order, and the investigation of all crimes that occur on land. They are also empowered to administer spot justice in small cases such as public drunkenness, disturbing the peace and breaking ward laws. Such matters are usually dealt with by the sergeant of the local Watch house, with punishments ranging from a small fine (no more than 5 Gu) or a night in jail, to a few hours in the stocks or even up to ten lashes if the sergeant is in a particularly bad mood.

The Black Caps are organized into Watch Barracks, one for each named district in the city except for the foreign ghettos, which are under the jurisdiction of a barracks in a neighboring area. The size of each barracks varies from ward to ward, depending on the area covered and its local character. Small, relatively peaceful areas like Schattinham have a correspondingly small presence, while Suiddock rates the largest Watch presence in the City and a barracks that looks more like a fort. Headquarters is in a large building in the Palace District near the High Court. Typically, though, each barracks is left to handle its own affairs. Ward Captains only request help from headquarters when a case requires specialized investigators or resources.

Watch Posts are placed at strategic points in each of the city's districts. Each post is manned by anywhere from four to twelve Watchmen, depending on the Ward Captain's judgement. The staff of each post are responsible for patrolling their area and enforcing any laws and bylaws, referring serious crimes to higher authorities. In some areas, these patrols are supplemented by citizen volunteers who help by lending numbers to the Watch patrol and acting as impartial witnesses. In poor quarters like Suiddock or the foreign quarters, anyone doing this is seen as little better than a traitor and a spy and had better not be caught alone near a convenient canal.

The Black Caps also form the core of Marienburg's militia. Dating back to the patriotic fervor that followed the expulsion of the Bretonnians, the law requires that each ward shall provide a certain number of volunteer crossbowmen to fill out the ranks of the Watch in times of emergency. Since the secession, though, the city has come to rely on mercenaries and the alliance with the Sea Elves, and the Watch's militia roles have been allowed to atrophy until its monthly crossbow drills are little more than social events and contests.”—Warhammer Wiki

Cadet

High Elf, Human

“Cadets are officers-in-training. They may attend formal schools like the Aquila Academies, or they may receive direct tutelage from officers in the field. Although cadets do learn to fight, the focus of their training is leadership. Some come from noble families, but this is by no means a given. Those who earned a place with battlefield exploits are more respected because they have lived war, not just read about it in books.

Early each morning a bugle summons the cadets from their barracks for a bout of vigorous exercise around the parade ground. They must then don their uniform and rank up for inspection before they are allowed breakfast. The rest of the morning is occupied by classes, where topics such as the history of warfare, battle tactics and the theory of command are studied, usually taught by officers retired due to injury. The head tutor, known as the Commandant, is often a high-ranking officer, the veteran of many battles.

Another formation drill precedes lunch, and the afternoon involves more classes to sharpen the mind, followed by rigorous athletic activity and weapon practice to strengthen the body. The cadets are inspected a final time before supper, and evening is reserved for personal study, until lights out at midnight. During important festivals, such as Year Blessing, the evenings involve a formal meal in full dress uniform.

The cadets' lives are strictly regulated, and discipline is severe, instilling in them a healthy respect for order. Even on Festag, the week's holiday, the college's priest of Sigmar or Myrmidia lectures the cadets on moral fiber.

A cadet spends three years at college. During the summer month of Nachgeheim, cadets are attached to a regiment. If a cadet is lucky, the regiment will be at war, but experiencing army life firsthand in peacetime is also invaluable to his military education. Many officers find cadets a nuisance and give them ridiculous orders to keep them out of the way, or otherwise amuse themselves playing cruel pranks on them.

During their final year at college, cadets must study hard to pass their exams. Those that make the grade are commissioned as an officer of the Imperial army and leave the school to join a regiment, an occasion marked with riotous celebrations.”

Celestial Dragon Monk

Human Cathayan

Among the greatest warriors in the East reside within the Temple of the Celestial Dragon Monks. An ancient and powerful order, the Dragon Monks are masters of unarmed combat. Warriors sometimes journey to the temple seeking training, though very few meet the strict requirements, or even survive their first encounter with a member of the order.

Established thousands of years ago, so ancient no records can recall an exact date, the order of Monks train rigorously across the Mountains of Heaven of Grand Cathay. Highly disciplined and nearly unbeatable in unarmed combat, the Dragon Monks are amongst the elite fighting forces at the disposal of the Dragon Emperor, called in as his elite anti-infantry force. So effective are these monks in close-quarter combat that even Orcs are rumored to prefer longer reaching weapons when engaging them in a fight for fear of being knocked cold in a single punch.

While their reputation is one that must be seen to be believed, it nonetheless holds true, with epic retellings of long dead warriors having battled the likes of massive monsters, undead, great demons and even the noble dragons themselves. These legends often become their era's respective Grand Masters of the order, giving future generations access to thousands of years of records on the history of the order, Cathay, and the many legendary techniques perfected by immortalized Celestial Dragon Masters before them.

The truly masterful monks are said to travel to the highest peaks of the mountains, searching for jade tigers and dragons to fight in a one-on-one duel to the death--the monk walking away a master of the martial arts should they survive such a dangerous encounter.

Their fighting styles take influence and mirror that of the 8 Winds of Magic, consisting of 8 unique and difficult to master Paths of unarmed combat, some more brutal and destructive, while others grant better self-preservation or precision strikes.

Nevertheless, each style is unique in its own way, testing the monk's abilities to their breaking points and making them nearly unbeatable against anyone foolish enough to challenge them should they complete their decades-long training. It is said an experienced monk can even slay an enemy in one blow to the chest with their palms, rupturing innards and stopping their heartrate altogether. These stories have attracted the interest of some in the Old World—even seeking this power for themselves.

In recent history, due to increased relations between Cathay and their new trade partnership with Westerland, monks have started traveling to the unknown lands of the Old World in hopes to seek better knowledge, power or to spread the word of the Celestial Dragon Emperor's divine benevolence. Some simply travel to the Old World for fortune, adventure and exploration, possibly to even establish a new temple and spread their order's teachings.

"For all the strangeness of man I have seen over the years I find those shaved-headed men in the Mountains of Heaven the strangest. I simply cannot fathom seeing a man, without armor or a weapon, felling an ogre barehanded. If true, they give the people of Chrace a run for their money."—Oralin the Valiant, High Elf Ambassador

Chekist

Human Ungol or Gospodar

“The Chekist of Kislev are the Tzarina’s secret police. Their existence is not secret, and they have a lot of open members, but they also have spies searching for signs of corruption and opposition to Katarin’s rule.

The chekist are—by decree of the Tzarina—infallible in their interpretation of the law. Whatever they say the law is, is the law, and the penalties they select are always appropriate to the crime in question. They never convict the wrong people, and while they may arrest and torture people who prove to be innocent, that is no fault of the chekist.

The most important qualification for becoming a chekist is absolute loyalty to the Tzarina, which is closely followed by competence. Katarin does not want to institute a reign of terror; she just wants to be able to deal with her enemies quickly and efficiently. Chekist who display excessive cruelty and incompetence are arrested by their superiors and soon become even more closely acquainted with the furnishings of the interrogation rooms. The simply incompetent generally die in the course of their duty, without any assistance from their superiors. Chekist who are sadistic but competent pose the biggest problem. In most cases, they are rotated around the country, so that no single area suffers too much from their depredations. Often, they are assigned to deal with very dangerous threats because the hierarchy would rather lose a difficult chekist than one who fits in perfectly.

The chekist carry an elaborate, minted medallion identifying their position and show it if required to prove who they are. They wear black when on duty but have no formal uniform beyond that, making it relatively easy to pose as a member of the secret police. The chekist deal with anyone who pretends to be one of them, which is another task frequently assigned to those who are both sadistic and competent.

Checkists have no official, structured organizations to speak of, save in their devotion and duty to the Tzarina herself. They rule through fear and intimidation – not qualities one seeks in a friend or drinking companion.

Very few men can take the strain of such constant vigilance; many chekist agents retire from the ranks after only a few years of active service. The ruthlessness necessary to do their job doesn’t come naturally for everyone, and only a few individuals truly have the utter lack of compassion and unthinking dedication to their Queen that allows them to forget the pain and suffering they inflict on individuals – some of them innocent of any crime – for the good of the State.

Because of their connections to the chekist organization, as well as the many skills they honed while in the Tzarina’s service, retired chekists are highly sought-after by all of the crowned heads of the Old World. For the same reasons they are also prized by the criminal underworld and can command fat salaries if their reputation is fearsome enough.”—Warhammer Wiki

Condottiero

Human Tilean

Condottieri are leaders of bands of mercenaries engaged to fight in numerous wars among the Tilean states. The name was derived from the condotta, or "contract," by which the condottieri put themselves in the service of a city or of a lord. The first mercenary armies in Tilea (often called Dogs of War) were made up of foreigners. The earliest was composed of Estalians and men of the Empire who had fought in the wars of the south. In the mid-15th century IC Araby invaded Estalia and sent additional forces against Tilea, terrorizing the country, devastating Luccini, Trantio, and Pavona prompting an even higher demand for personal mercenary protection. The organization of the companies was perfected in the early 16th century IC by Muzioni Dollo da Fortza, in the service of Verezzo, and his rival Braccio da Monda, in the service of Remas. Muzioni's son, Francesco da Fortza, who won control of Miragliano in 1550 IC, was one of the most successful of all the condottieri. Due to the divisive political tensions, Tilean states began to raise more advanced mercenary armies, and soon condottieri were conquering principalities for themselves.

In the late 25th Century IC, Borgio the Besieger, the most famous of the Tilean condottieri, was the Merchant Prince of Miragliano and for decades led his mercenary company in the many internal wars of northern Tilea, shocking and inspiring all the nearby city states with their skill in battle. There was not a single city that could defy him, and he fought against every principality and republic in all of Tilea. Many more famous companies and rulers such as Lorenzo Lupo and Lucrezia Belladonna would make names for themselves alongside Borgio, but none can match the reputation of the Besieger.

The soldiers who fight under the condottieri are deeply varied depending on the company they work under: From heavily armored crossbowmen, duelists and pikemen, to heavy and shock cavalry, these diverse companies are noted for their rapacious and disorderly behavior outside of conflict but feared for their unflinching sense of discipline on the frontlines. With no goal beyond personal gain, the armies of the condottieri often change sides, and their battles can often result in high amounts of bloodshed against their former "allies", so long as the pay to betray their employers was good enough to cover any lost revenue. Despite this, most modern condottieri and their companies are led and run by Tileans with their nationalities tied to the regions or city states they were born in. It is not uncommon for fledgling mercenary leaders to start their roots in their home states, but as their career progresses, they tend to sell their services to new lands within Tilea, Estalia, the Border Princes and especially the Empire.

"As they approached the castle our hearts sank. Braganza's men never lost or fled and we knew we were doomed. Our captians began to explain how safe we were behind the walls, but a crossbow bolt cut him short. No one wanted to be the next victim."—The mercenary Gunter Friesheim, in his report on the capture of the "impregnable" fortress of Schloss Adlerberg.

"For the Leopard!" they roared, and charged the Greenskins. The Orc line swayed, then fell apart under their assault and the rest of our army took up the victorious cry. "For the Leopard!" we roared and charged too....We'd all share the glory - and the loot."—Filimir Tzapinka, mercenary Sergeant, on the battle of the Frozen Lakes

Conquistador

Human Estalian

There is no Estalian alive who hasn't heard about the legend of Rodrigo, Champion of Myrmidia, though the Arabyans knew him with a far grander term than would be expected from his mortal enemies: "Al-Assid" or "Cid", meaning Lord/Conqueror. Rodrigo commanded and fought with the grace of nobility and fury of an estranged mercenary, having been exiled after being unjustly judged guilty for the murder of his liege. His sense of justice and devotion against all odds earned him a spot in the annals of Estalian history, but not just due to his namesake and achievements. For his "Conqueror" status didn't come from his personal heroics alone.

Unbeknownst to most of the Estalian common folk, the nobility became more infatuated with Rodrigo's organizational skills than his many other achievements. The man was mainly responsible for the creation of the "Tercio", a professional mercenary unit made up of combining the long reach and stalwart formation of spearmen, the stopping power and damage of arbalests (later handguns to greater effect) and the flexibility and combat prowess of heavy swordsmen. This type of unit, often fighting in combination with more mobile units of Almogavars, was attributed with the most significant victories during the Reconquista of Estalia from Araby after Sultan Jaffar's invasion in the 15th Century IC. And the nobles were quick to emulate this success, creating their own units of professional mercenaries in the same spirit.

While not as renowned as most Tilean Dogs of War (Estalians will often cite mischievous self-aggrandizing on the Tileans part), these "Compañías de Tercio", made of up hardened "Conquistadores" carrying the legacy of the legend that made them, present the cleaner, nobler version of Estalian military might, in contrast to their rugged Almogavar companions. Their experience battling in Araby and the New World make them a force to be reckoned with, one sure to pin down any army foolish enough to seek open battle... for the right price, of course.

From the New World, Conquistadors returning home tell tales of ancient floating cities of gold and roaring monsters that snap armored knights in two with a single snap of their jaws. Of the few whom return alive, they are wealthy beyond their wildest dreams, bringing with them exotic armors, weapons, trinkets and ships full of gold enough to bring a popper to a king overnight. These tails inspire new conquistadors to enlist and seek new fortune in the colonies of Lustria... but even fewer return, and the cycle repeats. Most Conquistadors are content taking jobs in the Southern Realms and the Old World, with the Border Princes, Empire and Marienburg being their predominant employers; however in recent years under Tzar Boris the Red, a few lucky Estalians have even found high paying work in the courts of Kislev to the far east.

"I and my companions suffer a disease of the heart and soul, and the only cure... is gold." —Francisco Javier Villegas, Lustrian Conquistador and enemy of Itza

"I do not have to forgive my enemies, I have had them all shot." —Franco Dávila, Dictator of Vanlen and veteran of the Great War Against Chaos

The Conquistadors Pray by Margaret Duncan Coxhead, 1909

Corsair

Human Arab

The sea holds many dangers in these dark times, from sea monsters to dark elves and pirates—both living and dead. Amongst all the blood, plunder and chaos lies another devil of the high seas, the infamous and legendary corsairs of Araby. While Al-Haikk might be the city of thieves, it is the port city of Lashiek, home to the sultan, where these fiendish dogs of the sea originate. For thousands of years these corsairs dominated the slave trade, from the Black Gulf to the coastal towns along the Great Sea and the Sea of Claws.

Corsairs are amongst the finest elites on the lands and seas around Araby. Both sailor and warrior, these men and women are considered unmatched duelists able to cut down most sailors and privateers foolish enough to stand against them. From nobility and former military ranks all the way down to the commoners and peasantry of Araby, many peoples fill the ranks of the corsairs--thirsty for coin and danger. Even the might of the Imperial and Bretonnian Navies aren't enough to subdue them, as their expert seamanship and lightning fast ambush tactics make them nearly impossible to respond to after a merchant vessel or astray patrol ship is sacked, stripped of all it's worth and its crew enslaved.

The corsairs of Araby have a long and bloody rivalry with the pirates of Sartosa, and for countless centuries they've been in a stalemate for control of the high seas. These pirate wars reached their height around the 13th century IC as large portions of Sartosa itself was conquered and controlled by the Arabyans for centuries. The Sartosans eventually drove off their invaders, but this was partially due to a rise in Norscan and Dark Elf competition around the Tilean sea, forcing the corsairs to fight against no less than three powerful rivals at one time. Nonetheless Araby is still the reigning power of the slave trade in the south, raking in a massive sum of wealth for themselves and the economy of Araby. From the port of Lashiek lies the heart of the slave trade and the main domain of the many pirate lords and guilds, all under the protection of the sultan himself. The best corsairs are said to have captured and sold hundreds-thousands of slaves within their lifetimes.

As part of a deal with the sultanate, the corsairs swear never to attack an Arab vessel, pay the sultanate a portion of their earnings and to fight on the sultan's behalf for many naval conflicts that threaten Araby alongside its existing navy. This agreement has been honored for thousands of years and it has offered the corsairs protection from their seafaring enemies, immediate access to the Arab slave market, amnesty from the state for their acts of piracy and allies within the professional Arabyan navy that guards the waters around Araby—although many naval personal are themselves former corsairs or become corsairs. For this the corsairs are both nefarious devils of the sea to much of the Old World and are respected and cherished among many people in Araby. They're so good at their job they are often hired by Marienburg merchants as guards and escorts through the dangerous waters they travel, or as personal bodyguards when docking on foreign lands.

"I miss the old days, before I was called the 'King of Sartosa'. I miss the thrill of hopping on to a ship to plunder and challenging the crew to a duel for their freedoms! ...Now, they simply run and hide, and I grow bored..."—Abd Al Wazaq, Legendary Corsair and Pirate King of Sartosa in the 16th Century IC

Crusader

Human

"It is perhaps the greatest deed a templar can perform to go to war in the name of the Gods. In ages past, especially during the Crusades against Araby, it was unusual for a knight to not go on crusade with his order. But in more recent times crusades are far less common, especially on such a scale.

Crusaders are those knights who are veterans of crusades, who have earned great glory for their order and faith through their deeds in foreign lands against the enemies of the cult. They are world-wise men, skilled at fighting in all manner of conditions and against all manner of enemies, and many knights who return from crusade find their deeds forever etched in the legends of their order.

Not all crusaders hail from the nobility or from a knightly order, although it is certainly true that most do. Some are pious men who are mere soldiers, fighting alongside the armies of templars and knights, and their deeds are no less noble despite their lesser status.

Although crusades are usually declared by a religious order, many of the knights who join them are driven by worldly motives like revenge or the pursuit of glory.

Crusaders from the Empire typically belong to Sigmarite or Ulrican orders such as the Knights Panther or Knights of the White Wolf. Crusaders from the southern lands of Estalia and Tilea are almost entirely from the Myrmidian Order of the Righteous Spear. Bretonnian crusaders fight on behalf of their liege lords and the Lady of the Lake, rather than belonging to organized knightly orders.

The lands north of Kislev have become a popular destination for crusaders from across the Old World since the Storm of Chaos. Crusades are costly endeavors, often requiring significant investment from nobles and merchants. Religious orders lacking the resources to supply ships and baggage trains themselves must guarantee treasure or parcels of land to potential financiers. Wealthy benefactors who wish to have their interests properly represented provide soldiers led by knights from their own armies, or even accompany the crusade in person.

Within the Empire, the Cult of Sigmar is the only religious order with sufficient wealth to launch a crusade without the backing of others, although the temples' coffers would be depleted by such an endeavor, so the patronage of nobles is generally solicited."

Dervish

Human Arab

The Dervishes of Araby are the most fanatically loyal warriors within the Cult of the Great Prophet. These whirling death-dealers represent the sheer level of piety and unquestioning faith within the Araby armies, carving a bloody path through the ranks of even the most hardened men and monsters within their sights. They are said to have no fear, no remorse and some even rumor they suffer no pain—unlikely but widely believed. They charge into battle wielding their blades and relentlessly decimate ranks of troops not dissimilar to a Dwarf Slayer or any of the many Flagellants within the Empire.

Dervishes are found most often on the western portion of Araby within the Land of the Dervishes, far to the south of Lahiek and over the mountains that separate the two. They are descendants of the numerous nomadic tribes that litter the land outside the major city-states, surviving near oases and making frequent pilgrimages to Martek as part of their religious traditions. Their unflinching belief in their faith has earned them renown amongst the people with some achieving such great status that they are taken in by the caliphs and viziers of Araby, and even the Sultan himself, as legendary bodyguards known as the “Black Scimitar Guard”—a legendary troupe first recorded to be the personal elite warriors of Sultan Jaffar, said to best many of the fiercest knights of Bretonnia and the Empire during the Great Crusade, dying to the last man and setting an example for generations to come.

Dervishes are deeply nomadic as part of their tradition and are often accompanying priests of Ormazd, merchants and nobility as protection. Their fanatic loyalty to their faith and its teachings make them highly trustworthy guards once a deal has been made; plus, they ask for comparatively little to other mercenaries and escorts. They donate large portions of their income to the cult, and in recent years as trade has rapidly increased, they’ve grown more frequent in the Empire through Marienburg attempting to convert more into their cult with very limited success.

“He ran at me like a devil, whirling his blades and cutting down no less than three of my brothers before reaching me. As I lifted my shield, I could not help but fear for my life, seeing those once valiant knights butchered as I coward behind them. I was driven back, blow after blow, pushing me to a wall... ‘Was this the end’, I thought? Only a moment later a knight of the Empire charging on his steed pierced through the whirling devil’s chest with a lance. By the time the man was slain I’d lost my companions, my pride and my honor...” --Lucas Trouvé, Crusader Knight of Bretonnia

Desert Rider

Human Arab

The deserts of Araby are a hostile and unforgiving land, rife with Greenskins and undead. The sun scorched dunes burn with a heat high enough to cook a man to death in a few hours, and water is more precious than gold. Under these conditions it takes a hardy group of people to live in such a harsh environment. These nomads make up the bulk of much of the cavalry at the sultan's command. Hardy and zealous as any priest of Ormazd, these individuals charge across the dunes ambushing, butchering and enslaving their foes with ruthless efficiency. Much like the corsairs of Lashiek, these Desert Riders come from many walks of life: nobles, commoners, peasants and more make up the ranks of the Desert Riders with the nomads and bandits outside the cities making up the vast majority. They also hold a large stake in the Arab slave trade, ambushing and enslaving many travelers, native or foreign, and defending the borders between the Land of the Dead and Araby.

Desert Riders make up the majority of the light cavalry for Araby with many being taken in to serve in the name of the various caliphs, sheikhs and viziers that rule its cities and territories. While some serve out of a sense of duty, pride or for religious reasonings, the vast majority are simply paid into service. They fight using the terrain to their advantage, able to engage invading forces on their terms with day or night ambushes--hails of arrows peppering their enemies, allowing the rest of their forces to close in and cut down the trespassers. Many Tomb King attempts at conquest and Greenskin warbands have ended at the hands of these brave individuals. Day and night, these experts of the desert sands of Araby are the main shield against the many evils that plague their people. The most famous being the Desert Dogs lead by Al-Muktar, an Old Worlder turned mercenary king after winning over the loyalty of a powerful band of Desert Riders who had initially captured him. Since then he has carved out a reputation as one of the most powerful mercenary leaders in Araby, if not all of history.

Not all Desert Riders are slavers, bandits and cavalymen, however. Many seek fortune, travelling across the sands and exploring the ancient tombs and ruined cities of millennia's past. Bel-Aliad, being the most sought after, is the place where most young and ambitious adventurers go to seek their fortune--and many their doom. Its ancient halls and sunken homes are said to hide untold treasures, attracting many to its domain. Desert Riders who enter and live to tell the tale are said to come out with powerful magical artifacts, including swords surrounded by flames, jeweled rings that grant the wearer divine luck and lamps that are rumored to hold the mystical Djinn trapped within them that sell for a fortune to the right magician.

"By the Lady, those heathens of the sands know no honor! No glory! They pillage us at night and steal from which they cannot kill. So long as I live, I shall hunt down and vanquish those so called 'Demons of the Desert' until there is not but sand and blood!"—Sir Jean-Luc Girault, Bretonnian Crusader

"We never had a chance sir. They came out of nowhere. Before we could turn they were in among us, shouting their chilling battle-cries as they cut us down. It's true we ran from them sir, but these were not men - they were demons on horseback."
—The Mercenary Gunter Frieshiem, explaining his part in the infamous Rout of Rifraffa

Diestro

Human Estalian

Clashing of steel is heard in one of the many back alleys of Magritta. It is a common sound, both in the tumultuous bustle of daylight and the gripping standstill of the night, which keeps a lot of very annoyed tenants awake without a way to complain. The reason? A falling out between noble houses, a grievance finally able to meld into ire and wrath, bad blood flowing through and ending in that contest of skill. At some point, the blades stop and the night falls tranquil... until the next bout begins anew. Such is the way of courtesy once words have stopped echoing.

Diestros are common within noble Estalian households, often coming from noble blood themselves or adopted during youth from orphanages around the country. It is quite unlike the prestigious lineages to rely on one of their own for such matters, preferring to put a lower member from a friendly family or a "fortunate" orphan to perform. They are dedicated solely to the study and perfection of the blade, with the sole purpose of defending the honor of their house against any and all attacks. In Estalia, this purpose often translates into the settling of disputes by way of fencing against another Diestro, sometimes to the death if the grievance is grave enough. In other circumstances, they are the last line of defence when guards prove unable to banish a threat.

Unlike other nation's duelist ranks, Diestros consider themselves nobles and are treated as such within Estalia, considered to be the birthplace of the duel. As such, while one can often be witness to lowborn fights between individuals, referred to ironically as "Riñas", they are not considered to be at the level of swordsmanship often seen in a bout between Diestros. Depending on the family lineage, they may be trained by a Fencing Master to become one for the newest heir in due time, but usually one of the many fencing academies provide ample opportunity to hone one's skills. For every Diestro is aware that, should they lose too often and too shamefully, so too will they lose their good fortunes.

Among the greatest Diestros, people speak of "Matasietes", a Killer of Sevens, swordsmen with ability bordering the unnatural, working as teachers or hired help for the most grandiose institutions. They often travel out of the Peninsula, learning as many combat techniques as they can before returning as seemingly invincible opponents, blessed by Myrmidia herself. Experienced fighters ought to beware of facing such an opponent and be sure to tackle them in quick haste... lest the Estalian be allowed to perform their own dance of death.

"Amigo... today you have made a great mistake! You have crossed swords with Manuel Aimar Alvaro Ferran Arturo Roberto Francisco Cesar Ignacio Muñoz III! Greatest duelist in all of Castill!"—Manuel Aimar Alvaro Ferran Arturo Roberto Francisco Cesar Ignacio Muñoz III before he was shot

Druid

Human Albion

Of all the mysteries of Albion perhaps the greatest is the purpose of the enigmatic figures known as Druids. Known as the original sorcerers by the people of Albion, when the Old ones still walked the Earth, they selected a few of the most promising of men and women and taught them many arcane secrets, with the intention that they pass these on and guide mankind to enlightenment. After the disappearance of the Old Ones they have bound chaos to the North with the Ogham stones. During the deterioration the Druids continued to remain in seclusion passing on their secrets in isolation. But with the advent of the Dark Shadows, which occurred soon after the end of the Great War Against Chaos in 2302 IC, they have been forced to take a more active role, guiding their most reliable allies in both the defense of Albion and the oppression of chaos marching to war with their fellow inhabitants of Albion.

Druids are strange people, red haired, muscular individuals with spiraling blue tattoos and their mystical rods of command, inscribed with ogham signs. They are able and skilled magic users that try to protect the artefacts of the Old Ones. Sometimes they utilize the Giants to move some of the large and heavy Ogham Stones following their visions of fulfilling the great plan of the Old Ones.

During the Dark Shadows, the Druids braved the perilous crossing over the Great Ocean to seek out noble civilizations. They foretold of great danger should their homeland of Albion fall; the forces that bind the Chaos mists to the northern realms would weaken and in so doing Daemon armies would be able to descend upon the world. To those who would help protect the isle they promised to teach secrets lost to civilization since the disappearance of the Old Ones. Fleets of adventurers and conquerors of all races set sail to the shores of Albion, while the mist and swirling fog around the island vanished, and the events of the Dark Shadows took place. In the end, the Druids and the Forces of Order won.

In the aftermath of the events of the Dark Shadows, many of the surviving Druids followed their fallen brethren that fled from Albion to hunt and track them down. They have since travelled all around the Warhammer world and sold their services as Dogs of War to the local leaders of men. They live as hermits, preserving the sorceries of their ancient land through ritual and ceremony, waiting for the day when the mists will rise, and they can return home once more.

"If aught must be lost, 'twill be my honor for yours. If one must be forsaken, 'twill be my soul for yours. Should death come anon, 'twill be my life for yours. I am given."—Senodonna, Truthsayer of Albion defending her home from Daemons during Dark Shadows

Executioner

Dwarf, Gnome, Halfling, High Elf, Human

An executioner is an official, often within towns and cities but sometimes villages, who carries out a sentence of capital punishment on a legally condemned person.

In the Empire, executioners are usually presented with an Imperial warrant authorizing or ordering them to execute sentences on behalf of the court, usually accompanying a bailiff, or magistrate in severe instances. The warrant, sealed in the symbol of Verena, protects the executioner from the charge of murder. In some Provincial militaries, the role of executioner is of grave importance as they carry out the sentences to execute known traitors within the ranks corrupted by the temptations of the Dark Gods. The common look of an executioner in the Empire is a hooded figure, sometimes clad in robes. This is done so members of criminal organizations, cultists and other unsavory individuals not fond of their comrades being beheaded do not identify and attempt retaliation on the executioner for carrying out their duty.

Many executioners are professional specialists who travel a circuit or region within the Provinces of the Empire, performing their duties, because executions are in high demand in these dark times and wealthier areas are willing to pay favorable amounts of shillings for a well-trained professional. Nothing pleases a noble more than knowing for a fact their enemies are eliminated, be they cultists, criminals, rebels or even political rivals. Within their field, resident executioners also administer non-lethal physical punishments or apply torture. These torturers are highly effective at gathering information on behalf of the Imperial courts, Witch Hunters, wealthy nobles and even some criminal organizations. Their skills at maximizing pain and suffering while preventing their victim from dying outright is invaluable for anyone willing to afford them.

In the Empire, High Executioners also tax lepers and prostitutes, and control gambling houses. Their mere presence and threatening apparel are enough to test even the hardest of citizens, and with the law on their side there is very little one can do to oppose them without going through the bureaucratic mess that is the court system. Not that it does much good, as their complaints are usually written off as a refusal to pay taxes. They are also in charge of the latrines and cesspools and disposing of animal carcasses, and many are found to be servants of Morr frequenting his temples and praying in his name before each beheading. While this is not universally the case by any means, it is theorized this worship is a method of coping as a side effect to being surrounded by death on such a regular basis.

"May ravens alight upon you."

—Morrian phrase meaning 'may your death be easy'

"Never look in their eyes before you swing. In fact, don't even look at their face. What you do is a job, and who they are doesn't matter to you. Their friends, dreams, beliefs or personal history are of no concern once they have been judged to enter Morr's portal. When the time comes make the stroke, hit them in the back of the neck with a precise, clean strike, not just with your raw brute strength. It makes it easier to cut them down that way... and is the least painful for them."

—High Executioner Johann Schlau, lecturing an apprentice hangman for once they become a headsman

Free Company Militiaman

Dwarf, Gnome, Halfling, Human

“Free Company Militia is a term that describes the Men and Women from neighboring towns or villages that have taken up arms, willingly or not, to serve alongside the armies of the Empire and defend the lands of their birth.

Whilst the mainstay of the Imperial army consists entirely of professional soldiers like Swordsmen, Halberdiers, and Spearmen, its armies are often bulked up by a large portion of Free Company regiments.

Some of these regiments consist of mercenaries, but much of it consists of local militias and levied servicemen to fight as a support unit should the need for quantity over quality be required. Many if not all of these Militias are outfitted with a motley variety of weaponry and armor that are more often than not provided by the individuals themselves. On rare occasions, some of these Militia groups consist of retired grizzly veterans who have left the military and settled down in a peaceful life many years ago, and it is their wisdom and courage that has held many Militia regiments together.

Most of the time however, these regiments consist of inexperienced villagers with little to no combat training and can only be readily identified by only a few scraps of tatty clothing, which may sometimes have a resemblance of a uniform of some kind, and often incorporate elements of the state's official colors. Equipped with mostly makeshift armor and weapons, which will include assortments such as bows, spears, swords, clubs, and particularly in rural communities, simple farming equipment like pitchforks or grain-scythes, these militias are often looked upon with distaste by many Empire Generals, and seldom use them in the battlefield. Though their lack of conviction for a cause can be questionable, especially during a campaign that these men have little to no business in being in, when the armies of the Empire's foes invades the lands of the Empire, their lack of conviction can grow into zealous devotion in their efforts to ensure that their homes and families shall not suffer a horrifying fate.”

Freeholder

Human Norscan

In the harsh lands of the cold north lies the savage nation of Norsca. Far from unified it is home to innumerable tribes of barbaric Norscans, as bloodthirsty against their southern enemies as they are to themselves—butchering for the Dark Gods and raiding the coasts for wealth and glory. But not all Norscans are so hostile. Farther to the southern end of Norsca lies the southern tribes and across the Great Ocean to Lustria lies the colony of Skeggi; much milder than their northern kin, these warriors live their harsh lives more as people, traveling, trading and selling their services for supplies, food, coin and, most importantly, adventure. The most common of these are the freeholders, men and women whom through service to their jarl have been granted freedom from their status as bondsman—slave warriors and workers.

Because of their status as travelers and traders, many Norscan freeholders have regular contact with Empire and Kislevite merchants. Norscans will often hire themselves out as mercenaries, and as such are highly respected and feared warriors. These will often have contacts with mercenary captains, minor nobles and officers within the standing armed forces of areas in which they serve. Giants of men and women they are very popular within the province of Westerland as their physique and experience as fine fighters and excellent sailors makes them the perfect defense against enemies on land and sea alike. Their fees are high, but their results speak for themselves. They even have a district in Marienburg dedicated to them—living and trading furs, fats and treasures in Norse Town.

Mercenaries that live long enough return to their people as heroes known as “Huskarls”, great warriors unmatched in strength and skill as the elite of their people. The greatest of huskarls become jarls in their own right after years of fighting, gathering wealth and experience.

However even the southern tribes are still worshippers of Chaos at heart, and many still fall under the gods in a lust for power and glory, gathering their strength and launching horrific raids on the southerners from the coasts of Tilea, Araby and Estalia up to the lands of Bretonnia and the Empire. It is true Norsemen pay tribute to the Dark Gods, but to say they are unblinking slaves to the Ruinous Powers is simply false. The Norsemen see themselves as honorable, strong, mighty and courageous, and for these virtues they thank the Gods. They are explorers, adventurers and champions, and those of the Southern tribes take pride in their rich culture, history and traditions enabling trade and commerce with the very southerners they war with regularly. Like all human civilizations, Norscans are complex and diverse.

"Say what you will of us, call us heathens because we deny your weak pretender-god. Call us savages because we strike at you, but know this -- it is we who are closest to the Ruinous Powers. We, most favoured of the gods, shall burn your lands, revel in your suffering, and destroy you. Despair! For all that remains for you is the taste of northern steel and the end of your world. Such is the will of the Gods."

—Hallbjörn, Norse Marauder.

"It takes strength of purpose to do this. But keep your loyalty true and my lord's hand will guide you correctly."

—Valkia the Bloody, Scion of Khorne

Grail Pilgrim

Human Bretonnian Peasant

"Grail Pilgrims are deranged, and suicidal fanatics dedicated solely to the service of Bretonnia's fabled Grail Knights, basking in the reflected glory of those mighty individuals.

Whilst worship of the Lady is centered on the nobility, the peasants do not ignore her. It is true that most peasants give their primary devotion to the other deities of the Old World. A few peasants, however, are as devoted to the Lady of the Lake as any Grail Knight. As these peasants cannot become Grail Knights or Damsels themselves, they try to be as close as possible to those who have. Damsels of the Lady are more feared than loved by most peasants, and most would drive off any who started following them around, so the vast majority of these peasants join the entourage of a Grail Knight. Such people are known as Grail Pilgrims.

A Grail Pilgrim, as long as he follows his Grail Knight, accepting the hardships of life on the road, is deemed to be on pilgrimage and thus cannot be seized by his lord. Few join purely for this independence, however, as Grail Knights seek out dangerous places, and the life expectancy of Grail Pilgrims is not long... Driven by relentless obsession, these pilgrims collect almost anything that a Grail Knight casts aside, whether it be scrap of ruined armor, clothing, or even discarded food. Such is their burning passion, these religious scavengers will follow their idol through all weathers and lands, exulting in his acts and praising his sparing words.

It has been known for these desperate peasants to mistake gravely wounded knights for dead - indeed it does not stretch credibility to believe that more than a few Grail Knights could well have met their demise as a result of being crushed by scavenging pilgrims. To such a zealot the most prized of all the possessions of a Grail Knight is his body itself. In fact, many bands of pilgrims cart around a Reliquae wherever they go, with the corpse of a departed knight resting at its center. The outside of the reliquae is a gaudy mélange, adorned with trinkets gathered from many Grail Knights from across all corners of Bretonnia.

Often, peasants in the crowd will choose to join the ragtag band of pilgrims, drawn by promises of salvation and the blessing of the Lady. Others are drafted into the ranks through threats and near blackmail, generously being offered an opportunity to earn the redemption of the Lady for crimes and misdeeds that are sometimes real but, more usually, invented by the fanatical preachers who are ever eager to expand their flock through any means. Battle Pilgrims are the fanatical worshippers of the knights from which they derive their namesake. They are furious warriors, utterly dedicated to their patrons. A ramshackle band of zealots, Grail Pilgrims make up for what they lack in skill with fury and righteous fire."—Warhammer Wiki

"I am but a simple man. To serve this most holy quest is reward enough for me."—Anonymous Grail Pilgrim.

Highlander

Human Albion

“So, it came to be that Albion remained a mysterious island. Many tales tell of raiding ships that have vanished into the mists never to be seen again. Occasionally the gossip in a tavern will turn to the tale of a friend of a friend who was shipwrecked on the isle and returned to tell stories of creatures that were half horse, half man or of terrible one-eyed beasts that stalked the mists. Some even claimed to return with riches beyond a man’s wildest dreams.

No truth to these stories has ever been proven, and the rumors of Albion remain little more than fantastic tales told by drunks to any who would listen. But then a new legend spread across the land. Sailors talked of an island which had suddenly appeared to the far north. Huge white cliffs loomed out from the sea, but the sailors had also spied beaches where a small boat may possibly make a landing. It would seem that the mists had parted, and the land lay open to explore. Every race across the world gathered its armies to seek the treasures of Albion and claim the island as their own.”—Warhammer Wiki Highlanders are the fittest and toughest of the barbarians of Albion—they must be to contend with the horrors that ravage the sparse human tribes that pepper its tainted and dark lands. Greenskins, Lizardmen, Beastmen and unspeakable monsters are a daily threat to the lives of the people of Albion and only their bravest people muster the strength to face them in combat. They wield stone-age weaponry, forsaking modern convention of armor and firearms due to their people’s lack of technological advancement and reliance on their tribal and druidic ways of living.

These warriors are amongst the bravest of their kind, as they charge into battle against large beasts, mutants and demons wearing nothing but the skin on their back and War Paint enchanted by the druids of Albion said to protect even the deadliest of blows. Lately they’ve been venturing out, seeking new lands for reasons only known to them. Often, it’s to acquire food, weapons or allies to bring back to their home, and some are even sent on a mystical quest by the tribe druid.

“I have nothing very certain to say about this island except that the inhabitants are less civilized than the Bretonni peasants, for they eat great quantities of food - and men as well. Moreover, they consider it an honorable thing, when their fathers die, to eat them....”—Curious Gezer, Tilean Mercenary and Explorer

Highwayman

Dwarf, Gnome, Halfling, Human

"Highwaymen prey on the coaches that roam over the roads of the Old World, relieving lockboxes of their goods and passengers of their valuables. They affect the styles of the upper nobility, wearing elaborate masks and showing every point of etiquette to their victims, as they prefer to regard themselves as daring rogues rather than high-class Thieves. Highwaymen, by necessity, are skilled horsemen, adept at convincing their horses to race over uneven and treacherous ground at high speeds. They are also excellent shots, as they have to contend not only with swiftly moving targets, but a large number of dangerous forest denizens as well."

"Well... I say, I say, what 'ave we 'ere? Jewelry? Fine garbs? A few bags 'a coins? A decorative chest? Oh deary me, and a fine prize indeed, Lord Gustav... your wife. Inquisidor

Human Estalian

Estalia is a region dominated by belief. It is well known that above the will of kings and their laws, Myrmidia's teachings hold sway for all that wish to live within the many Kingdoms, Baronies and Dukedoms. And to uphold these teachings, the Church of Myrmidia early on formed an organization capable of enforcing such power. La Inquisición was a body of devotees holding great sway in Estalia, ensuring the teachings of Myrmidia would come through all strata of society where possible.

It gained significant power during the reconquering efforts, with Inquisitors joining the armed hosts of Estalia against the invading forces and acting by way of political officers. After the reconquering efforts started to refocus, so did the way the Inquisición sought to hold sway over society. The Inquisition Schools of Magritta were born out of this necessity, to form specialized members in order to tackle increasingly complicated issues both in Estalian interior and exterior politics. The major lingering threat of Skaven has been a constant issue to Estalia's people for centuries, and the efforts of the Inquisidores has been vital to stemming the tide of endless rat men. Many Skaven slaves, clan rats and stormvermin have met their end at the blade of these expert rat killers. Deus Myrmidia!

From the fighting in the borders to the courtrooms; dealing with the influence of Chaos and diplomacy; these men became the middlemen for almost all aspects of Estalian society. It is stated that at one point, royally appointed judges got ousted by members of the Inquisition for giving out a contrarian verdict.

The most famous of these Inquisidores goes by Laurenzo Taurquema, who some say controls the kings of Estalia like they're puppets in his grand schemes. And who can say? While not completely closed to the world, the workings of Estalian laws and doctrine are held close like a secret better left buried. And one can only imagine how these individuals, trained since birth and being taught all the ways the men can be broken, would react to a world broken in faith.

"There are shadows in every corner, faces hiding truths that some would rather remain unburied. We have a duty to truth, to expose it, ugly as it may be, to render it into submission. Lies come in many a form, from the dejected corruption of an official to the taint of the dreaded mutation. And by Myrmidia's Grace and Wisdom, all who seek to sully her teachings will face our judgment. We are her Arms, her Eyes and her Ears. We are the true protectors against lack of belief." —Laurenzo Taurquema, Gran Inquisidor

Janissary

Human Arab

The Janissaries (meaning “new soldier”) were elite infantry units that formed the Araby Sultan's household troops, bodyguards and the first advanced infantry in Araby. The corps was most likely established centuries before the Crusades as elite infantry.

They began as an elite corps of slaves made up of kidnapped young children who were converted to The Cult of the Great Prophet and became famed for internal cohesion cemented by strict discipline and order. Unlike typical slaves, they were paid regular salaries. Forbidden to marry or engage in trade, their complete loyalty to the Sultan was expected. By the 14th century IC, due to a dramatic increase in the size of the Araby standing army, the corps' initially strict recruitment policy was relaxed. Civilians bought their way into it in order to benefit from the improved socioeconomic status it conferred upon them.

Consequently, the corps gradually lost its military character, undergoing a process that has been described as ‘civilianization’. The Janissaries were a highly formidable military unit in the early years, but after the Crusades in the 15th century IC, its military organization had declined, and the Janissaries became a force of change, subverting their religious dogma and centuries later embracing firearms. Steadily the rest of the Arabyan military power became outdated by comparison.

The Janissary corps today are distinctive in a number of ways: They wear unique uniforms, are paid regular salaries (including bonuses) for their service, march to music, live in barracks and were the first corps to make extensive use of firearms in Araby. A Janissary battalion is a close-knit community, effectively the soldier's family. By tradition, the Sultan himself, after authorizing the payments to the Janissaries, visited the barracks and received his pay alongside the other men of the First Division, but this tradition slowly eroded as the corps grew increasingly unpopular for preferring and specializing in black powder ranged warfare. They also serve as policemen, palace guards, mercenaries and fire fighters during peacetime.

The Janissaries also enjoy far better support on campaign than other troops of the sultanate. They are part of a well-organized military machine, in which one support corps prepares the roads while others pitch tents and bake the bread. They campaign with their own medical teams of Araby and Strigany surgeons and their sick and wounded are evacuated to dedicated mobile hospitals set up behind the lines. These differences, along with an impressive war-record, make the janissaries a subject of interest and study by Old World scholars.

Due to current state of Araby no longer being a unified superpower, and having adopted many foreign tactics and skillsets, many Janissary find themselves seeking work outside their homeland, travelling as far north as the Empire seeking fortune and glory in the name of The Great Prophet.

“We are the Sultan’s finest, but only the finest Sultans deserve us.” –Salim Al Immam, Head of the Janissary Corps

Janissary from Giannena by Otto Magnus Stackelberg

Jinyiwei

Human Cathayan

The Jinyiwei is the imperial secret police that serves the Celestial Dragon Emperor of Grand Cathay. The guard was founded to serve as his personal bodyguards. It has since become an imperial military body split between two divisions. They are given the authority to overrule judicial proceedings in prosecutions with full autonomy in arresting, interrogating and punishing anyone, including nobles for crimes related to the occults of Necromancy and Chaos.

The Jinyiwei is tasked with collecting military intelligence on the enemy and participation in battles during planning. These agents don a distinctive uniform, with a tablet worn on their torso, and carry a special silvered weapon. Jinyiwei wearing black uniform serve as the Emperor's personal experts on hunting down and annihilating the Jade Blood vampires and their undead legions. Those wearing the red uniforms serve as hunters of the innumerable Chaos cults found throughout the Emperor's domain and specialize in the purging of Tsien Tsin (Tzeentch) worshippers, especially spell casters. They are highly educated and taught that research and understanding of the occult is paramount to ending the lingering threats to the great eastern power. "Know thy self, know thy enemy. A thousand battles, a thousand victories."—The Jinyiwei's Oath that is taken once they enter service.

One of the duties of the Jinyiwei is to help the Emperor spy on his subjects. The Celestial Dragon Emperor has recently increased the Jinyiwei's duties, allowing them to inspect his officials at work in the capital city of Weijin, as a massive increase in Tzeentchian and necromantic activity has forced his divine hand. About 40,000 cultists were executed within the first year of the Jinyiwei's increased power, which has prompted accusations of abuse of power within the imperial court. These accusations stopped soon after.

The Jinyiwei are authorized to overrule judicial proceedings in prosecuting those deemed as enemies of the state, granted with full autonomy in arresting, interrogating, detaining them without trial and punishing them, without going through due process. They are bound to the service of the Emperor and take direct orders from him. They also served as political commissars for the Cathayan armies in times of war. In recent years, with the increased trade between Cathay and Marienburg, Jinyiwei have found themselves sought after by Cathayan merchants, scholars and diplomats as guards to help guarantee safe passage into the Old World for interests of the Emperor and Cathay. They also double as co-diplomats and brokers between the Empire and Cathay, sharing information and knowledge regarding undead and chaotic activity both powers suffer in equal amounts.

"I found myself being followed in the market the other day... eyes piercing through me like an arrow. 'The Emperor's eyes are everywhere' I'm told. A fact made most apparent to me as I detail my time here. I've met Witch Hunters with more joy in their eyes than these people..."—Oralin the Valiant, High Elf Ambassador

Knight of the Realm

Human Bretonnian Noble

Brettonnia is a nation that prides itself on the idea of chivalry and honor. Since the ancient human tribes of the Bretonni first set lands in the great country we know as Brettonnia, its people strong an independent from the Empire founded under the great warrior Sigmar. Under their own rulership they built a powerful feudal system with its backbone lying with the numerous noble knights that defend the realm with martial skill and honor in combat.

Since Brettonnia's unification under the great Gilles and the Companions, there is a near constant call to arms, as Knight Errants pour out of every dukedom ready to serve the Lady of the Lake. The legendary heavy cavalry of Brettonnia is said to share no equal, though many have tried, and through centuries of bloodshed and constant war they have proven time and again to hold true that status. From giant beasts to roaring hordes of Greenskins and Beastmen, it is both an honor and a necessity for valiant knights to fight all horrors in martial combat that seek to challenge them and to give their lives defending the people of the realm of Brettonnia.

At an early age young pages are picked from the nobility and trained in the art of warfare and swordsmanship. After years of education and training as a squire, they are ready to be granted the status as a Knight Errant, the first line of Brettonnia's defense against evil. They serve their duty proudly, with lance in hand, and after much experience in war, travel and an eagerness to serve the Lady, the lucky few manage to gain the title of Knight of the Realm. These greater protectors of Brettonnia make up the core of the Bretonnian military and serve unquestioningly and are the most common members of the ruling elite, holding their own portions of land to protect with their life.

However, the most pious, honorable and distinguished knights require more. The most devoted to the Lady take up the Quest for the Grail putting down their lance and swearing never again to raise it until their quest has been complete and they have become the greatest of their Lady's chosen protectors—Grail Knights. These Questing Knights are those nobles who are seeking the attention of their patron goddess, the Lady of the Lake, in hopes of acquiring her blessing to obtain the status of a Grail Knight. Living a solitary existence, these men strive to prove themselves to the Lady, performing good deeds, slaying foul beasts, and aiding the armies of Brettonnia when in times of peril.

The quest is long, harsh and brutal, but if succeeded those knights who prove themselves the most pure and worthy drink from the grail given by the Lady, and if they survive, they become her Grail Knights. These Knights are the very pinnacle of Bretonnian chivalry, honor, and bravery. Those Questing Knights who have drunk from the Holy Grail are blessed with the powers of the Lady and have thus been proven worthy to become Grail Knights. To obtain the position of a Grail Knight is the ultimate goal for all knights, and to become one is to be the very embodiment of a holy warrior. It is said that these knights are the greatest of mankind's warriors to walk the earth.

"I give my body, heart and soul, to the Lady whom I seek. No plea for help shall find me wanting. No obstacle will stand before me. No evil will taint the lands bequeathed unto me. When the clarion call is sounded, I will ride out and fight in the name of Liege and Lady. That which is sacrament, I shall preserve. That which is sublime, I will protect. That which threatens, I will destroy, for my holy wrath will know no bounds. Honour is all. Chivalry is all. Rejoice, for we, the Knights of Brettonnia... will be your shield."

—The combined vows of the Knights of Brettonnia.

A True Knight of Bretonnia

Blessings of the Lady:

Battle	Courage	Fortune	Might	Protection	Righteousness
--------	---------	---------	-------	------------	---------------

Knightly Virtue

Max: 1

Lore Accurate: You may select one virtue that best exemplifies your Knight. This Virtue cannot be retracted or upgraded. Once you select a Virtue you are beholden to the Bretonnian Code of Chivalry and must abide by its Seven Commandments and Rules of Honor or suffer Sin Points:

Seven Commandments

- To serve the Lady of the Lake.
- To defend the domains entrusted to them.
- To protect the weak and fight for the right.
- Always to fight the enemies of virtue and order.
- Never to give up the fight until the foe be defeated.
- Never to break faith with a friend or ally.
- Always to display honor and courtesy.

Rules of Honor

- A knight may only fight hand-to-hand, with sword or lance; they may not use a missile weapon.
- A knight shall always accept a challenge towards personal combat.
- A knight shall not draw sword against their fellow Bretonnian knights, except in trial by combat or within a tournament.
- A knight shall not allow themselves to be captured alive.
- A knight shall not flee from the enemy, nor retreat without proper tactical cause.

Virtue of Audacity - When determining Damage use your opponent's Strength Bonus as your Strength Bonus if it is higher; always determine this before any other rules modify your Strength or Strength Bonus. Further, if your target is larger than you, and your score a Critical, multiply all melee Damage you cause by the number of steps larger your target is (so, 2 steps = $\times 2$, 3 steps = $\times 3$, and so on); this multiplication is calculated after all modifiers are applied.

Virtue of Confidence - Whilst engaged in combat, as an Action you may issue a Challenge to a single opponent. Most targets of the Challenge are not obligated to accept the Challenge (though many do); Knights with any Virtue Talent must accept. For the duration of the challenge, you deal +1 Damage with your melee weapon attacks. Whilst engaged in a Challenge, you may not Challenge a new opponent in that combat until the first is defeated or has fled the battle. You must direct all attacks towards the challenged opponent until either you or they are defeated.

Virtue of Discipline - It is no easier to attack you when you are outnumbered. With this virtue, you negate any Combat Difficulty Modifiers your opponents would gain due to outnumbering you. This virtue does not negate any other circumstantial bonuses.

Virtue of Duty - You may pledge loyalty to up to three other characters. When you fight alongside those characters, they each gain a +5 bonus to their Weapon Skill characteristics. Unless all of them are present in a battle, you take a -10 penalty to your Weapon Skill Characteristic. This effect does not stack with other Virtue of Duty's. This pledge may be renounced should circumstances forbid your ally from accompanying you, such as their death or retirement, but it must be done under only the most serious of circumstances and cannot be undone willingly by yourself.

Virtue of Empathy - You are a true hero of the common people. Add the Etiquette (Peasantry) and Gregarious Talents to any career you enter; moreover, your bonuses when influencing others of lower Status are doubled (WHFRP 4E Core Rulebook Page. 51). Other knights do not think less of you for talking with your social inferiors. (They may think less of you for choosing this path in the first place, however.)

Virtue of Heroism - You excel at hand-to-hand combat and your hits can prove deadly. Whenever you roll +6 SL or more on a successful melee hit, you may choose to forgo the additional Damage to automatically inflict a Critical Hit instead. When using the Virtue of Heroism in conjunction with an Impact or Damaging Weapon, the Impact or Damaging Quality does not apply.

Virtue of the Ideal - You are considered the pinnacle of what it means to be "Bretonnian". You may choose 3 Bretonnian Noble Species Skills not previously taken to give free +3 Advances to, and a roll on the Random Talent Table for an additional Talent.

Virtue of the Impetuous Knight - Add the Berserk Charge Talent to any career you enter; moreover, your Charge has double its normal Movement distance when on foot.

Virtue of the Joust - You gain +20 WS when using a Lance.

Virtue of Knightly Temper - Add the Resolute Talent to any career you enter; moreover, when you Charge, you may attack twice as an Action.

Virtue of Noble Disdain - You gain a +20 bonus to your Weapon Skill when fighting characters who have used a missile weapon against you or your allies. You take a permanent -20 penalty to your Ballistic Skill characteristic and gain Animosity (Ranged) due to your loathing for such cowardly means, even from your allies.

Virtue of the Penitent - You may not use magic items or ride steeds other than a horse. Any weapon you wield counts as Magical, and the Critical Value of any Critical Hit roll made against you is reduced by -10. A Critical Hit with a value of 0 has no effect.

Virtue of Purity - You invoke the Gifts of the Lady with utmost purity. You are amongst her most devout and pious of champions, channeling her will on the battlefield like a true paladin of Bretonnia! If you roll a successful Pray Test, you can choose to either use your rolled SL, or the number rolled on your units die.

Virtue of Stoicism - You may re-roll any failed Fear or Terror Test, or any failed Test to resist Intimidation. If the re-roll succeeds, ignore the first failure.

Two crowns by Frank Bernard Dixie, 1900

Becoming a Questing Knight

Virtue of the Quest - This Talent has several effects, but they only apply whilst the character is in the career of the Questing Knight. If they complete the career and move on or abandon it to take up a different basic career, the effects of the Talent lapse. If the character completes the career and becomes a Grail Knight, the Talent is lost altogether. If they simply abandoned the Quest, they retain the Talent receiving endless visions, and if the knight re-enters the Questing Knight career its effects apply once more.

Description: You take a -50 penalty to your Weapon Skill characteristic if you have a lance. Questing Knights renounce the use of that weapon, and those with the Virtue of the Quest find it hard to break that pledge; moreover, any worldly possessions they hold are abandoned (aside from their adventuring gear, steed, weaponry and armor), be it donating all their money to a nearby Grail Chapel and renouncing any controlled land until their quest is complete. You receive visions that direct your quest. These visions lead you to the places where you should be, which normally means that they lead you into danger. At any time, you may call upon your strength of purpose to give you succor. As an Action, you may spend a Fortune Point to heal 1d10+WPB of your own Wounds.

Becoming a Grail Knight

The Grail Quest: The Questing Knight's quest is a defining feature of the how the character plays each session, both mechanically and during roleplaying. It must provide a sufficient challenge in order for the knight to logically complete the Questing Knight career and to enter the Grail Knight career, and the adventures included should have more significance than the defeat of random fringe bands of bandits, greenskins or a monster. Once the character has reached the point of advancement from Questing Knight to Grail Knight, they should be put under one last significant task by The Lady, usually consisting of 3-5 or more sessions of story content leading to their final encounter with The Green Knight.

Significance

There are many different types of significance which suit different styles of play. In one example, the Questing Knight could unearth and defeat a significant threat to the land of Bretonnia be it internal or outside its borders:

For example: This might be a secretive underground Chaos or Necromancy cult hiding in a major city or large town, an Orc warlord ravaging the local populace--possibly the beginning of an Orc WAAAGH!!!, a Bestigor gathering a war herd, or even a Norscan raiding party being led by a potential Chosen of the Chaos Gods unleashing carnage in their names.

Another method could have the events of the quest force the Questing Knight to face their weaknesses or past mistakes. Thus, a knight who failed to defend a village against an Orc attack might find themselves placed to defend a different village from a horde of Beastmen. On the other hand, a knight with a tendency to lose their temper might find themselves forced to calmly negotiate peace between two nobles or warring factions who hate each other and have nothing but contempt for the Questing Knight and their companions.

Whilst other player characters may be involved, they are essentially following the knight on their quest. If the Questing Knight is uncovering a major threat to the land, then it's the sort of thing adventurers do anyway. If they're facing their own flaws, the other characters may feel a bit left out, so considering bridging the knight's personal journey with one or more of their companions. Perhaps the knight failed to protect one of them in a past encounter causing them to lose an eye or an arm, or gain a Corruption Point? The best thing to do here is talk to the players and see what they would be happiest doing.

The Green Knight

The final part of the quest, the confrontation with the Green Knight, is for the Questing Knight alone. The combat with the Green Knight could be a purely symbolic gesture if the Questing Knight has saved Bretonnia from a major threat, or it could be a test of whether or not the knight has the skill to back up their acts of chivalry. At this point it is up to the GM how to proceed. The Green Knight is one of, if not the most skilled duelist in Warhammer Fantasy, besting innumerable foes and being virtually immortal; however, his stats don't need to reflect this fact. The Green Knight is a test, just like any of the tests sent by The Lady to her loyal knights during the rest of their Quest. It is recommended, if you stat the Green Knight, that he acts as a counter to the knight PC, with his Characteristics, Trappings and Talents being nearly identical. Once the duel is finished (preferably in victory) the final step with the Grail Quest is all that remains.

The Lady of the Lake

The meeting with the Lady is a dramatic event. Lights shine from the lake that you meet her by. The Lady, dazzlingly beautiful, walks across water and through the mists holding the Grail for the knight to drink, and as the character drinks from the Grail they see the whole world in a new divine way. The Questing Knight hears the stories of the encounters between the greatest of Bretonnia's heroes, including the Grail Companions, and the Green Knight and the Lady. Their encounters include elements from the stories made from the experiences of the Questing Knight and the party they accompany, making it clear that the knight's journey and friendship is just as much a part of the same tradition since Bretonnia's unification. After this ceremony is concluded, the PC may select a Grail Virtue, assuming they have purchased at least one Knightly Virtue.

Knight Jousting Tournament Vintage by Karen Arnold

Grail Virtue

Max: 1

You may select one Grail Virtue after advancing to Grail Knight. This virtue cannot be retracted or upgraded and requires you've acquired the Knightly Virtue of the same name: You cannot acquire the Grail Virtue of Audacity for instance without first acquiring the Knightly Virtue of Audacity. You gain a permanent +5 bonus to your Strength and Toughness Characteristics this does not count towards your Advances; moreover, you gain the Regenerate Trait and the Immunity (Corruption, Disease, Fatigue, Poison) Trait.

Grail Virtue of Audacity - Add the Robust Talent to any career you enter. Attacks from larger creature's weapons no longer gain the Damaging or Impact Qualities against you due to their size difference.

Grail Virtue of Confidence - Whilst you are involved in a Challenge, all other opponents must succeed a Very Hard (-30) Weapon Skill Test to hit you. Also, you gain a +1 to your Toughness Bonus against your opponent during the duel, cannot be Feared or Intimidated by your opponent and you cannot lose Advantage if hit during the duel by enemies that are not the challenger.

Grail Virtue of Discipline - When outnumbered in melee, the knight gains the same Combat Difficulty Modifiers to hit as their enemies would. This bonus applies even though their enemies are denied the outnumbering bonus.

Grail Virtue of Duty - If you fight alongside those to whom you are pledged, they gain +1 bonus to their Melee Attack Damage and +10 bonus to their Strength characteristics during the Battle. If any of those to whom you are pledged are absent, you take a -10 penalty to your Strength and Toughness characteristics. This effect does not stack from multiple Grail Virtue of Duty's.

Grail Virtue of Empathy - Add the Impassioned Zeal and Public Speaker Talents to any career you enter. You may attempt an Opposed Leadership/Willpower Test to recruit people of Brass Status or who fall under the Peasant Class as Men-At-Arms to accompany you in battles as a united fighting force under your banner. The amount determined is based on your levels in Public Speaker and the amount of people you can influence at a time plus the SL of the Test (WHFRP 4E Core Rulebook page. 142). If you have the Commanding Presence Talent, you may roll your Leadership Test unopposed against those who respect your authority. With Bless (The Lady), you may also grant any Blessing of the Lady for all Men-At-Arms recruited as if they were a single entity. Stats and equipment for Men-At-Arms are determined by the GM.

Grail Virtue of Heroism - If you inflict Damage on an opponent, you deal an additional number of Wounds equal to the opponent's Armor Points on that location. In addition, if you deal any Melee Damage to non-metal armor, armor has no effect in Damage reduction for the creature.

Grail Virtue of the Ideal - You gain a permanent +5 Weapon Skill and a +5 to either your Strength or Toughness Characteristic this does not count towards your Advances; moreover, you may choose any 3 Bretonnian Noble Species Skills to give a free +5 Advances to.

Grail Virtue of the Impetuous Knight - Add the Furious Assault Talent to any career you enter. When Charging on foot, your melee attacks strike with such force they inflict a -10 WS penalty on any foe who opposes them.

Grail Virtue of the Joust - In your hands, all lances count as magic weapons and deal +2 additional Damage while mounted and Charging. They also lose the Improvised Weapon effect if used on a round you haven't Charged, while mounted. If you wield a lance that is already magical, its Damage is increased by +1.

Grail Virtue of Knightly Temper - When you Charge, you may now attack three times as an Action. If the initial enemy charged target survives all attacks, you may make one additional free attack each turn against it until it is dead.

Grail Virtue of Noble Disdain - Double the Critical Value of any Critical Hit you score against an opponent (ignoring Critical Deflection) who has used missile weapons against you or your allies. Example: rolling 25 becomes 50 on the Critical Wounds table. If the amount exceeds 100, you instantly inflict the 100 result of the table related to that body part.

Grail Virtue of the Penitent - All Critical Wound effects have their conditions reduced by -1. Example: gaining 2 Bleeding and 1 Blinded from Struck Forehead now only grants 1 Bleeding. This does not apply to Critical Wound Tests that cause Conditions. Also, you may reverse the dice of a Critical Hit made against you if it lowers the result on the Critical Wound Table. This effect does not stack with the -10 to a Critical Hit result provided by Virtue of Penitent and must be decided between the two.

Grail Virtue of Purity - Add the Luck Talent to any career you enter. During combat you may spend 1 Fortune point to gain all Blessings (The Lady) for yourself for 6 Rounds.

Grail Virtue of Stoicism - Add the Resistance (Magic) Talent to any career you enter. You are immune to Fear and Terror and cannot be Intimidated. If you purchased the Fearless, Stout-hearted, Unshakeable and other similar Talents you may refund the XP spent if you select this Virtue.

Kossar

Human Ungol or Gospodar

"Kossars fight on foot with axe and bow and their name is descended from an Ungol tribe that previously fought as mercenaries for the Gospodars against the other Ungols when they first invaded. As a result, joining the kossars is seen as a way of cutting their ties and escaping a difficult past.

The officers accept anyone who can pass the fitness tests, and Tzar Boris granted new kossars a full pardon for any crimes committed before they joined. This pardon does not, of course, apply to crimes committed after becoming a kossar. Contemporary kossars include both Ungols and Gospodars, and they have more than their fair share of criminals, bored younger sons, and general troublemakers. This structure means they have an even worse off-duty reputation than most soldiers.

Their Boyars do not keep records of the number of kossars executed for their crimes against civilians, as the numbers would be too embarrassing. The Ice Queen would like to restore the kossars pay and increase the size of the army, introducing elements of cavalry. However, many nobles, both Gospodar and Ungol, are very suspicious of any moves to increase the size of the standing army and have encouraged winged lancers and horse archers to see any attempt to include cavalry in the standing army as an insult to their prowess. On the other hand, they are extremely effective in battle, as they are trained constantly and drilled in battlefield tactics and maneuvers. This reputation is also widespread, so a settlement facing imminent attack is always glad to see the kossars but also keen to see them leave again.

Originally, the Kossars were an Ungol tribe that lived northeast of the Empire. An eastern people known as the Gospodars invaded this region, subjugated the Ungols, and founded the nation of Kislev. During this conflict, the kossars sold their skills to the Gospodars as Mercenaries, fighting against other Ungol tribes. Their unique style of fighting impressed the Gospodar nobility, and since that time Kossar regiments have served the Tzars of Kislev. These days the Kossars are no longer a tribe, but a tough military unit drawn from all over Kislev. They are armed with bows and great axes, making them quite flexible on the battlefield. Many kossars, tired of the ceaseless warfare of their native land, travel to the Empire to become Mercenaries or adventurers."—Warhammer Wiki

Lustrian Luchador

Dwarf, Halfling, Human

The followers of the goddess of War herself are experts of trial by combat, with Estalians and Tileans to this day both claiming to be the true descendants of her lineage. Conflicts predictably arise, and nowhere is this more prevalent than through honorable duels and trials by combat in her name with mixed results. In Tilea, wrestling is a past-time that stretches back thousands of years of the people's history, with leaders like Lorenzo Lupo claiming to be unbeatable in the ring. Estalians are fans of the eccentric and fashionable who take pride as the birthplace of modern dueling and sporting the finest duelists in the Old World. Deep within the Estalian colony of Santa Magritta in the New World these two cultures mixed as floods of colonists from Tilea and Estalia made their way to the New World, and by the early 1900's the Lustrian Luchador was born.

The luchadors are predominantly devout worshippers of Myrmidia and champions of honorable combat via wrestling and spectacle. Much like their pit fighter counterparts, luchadors enter into a ring against one or multiple opponents and must battle their way to victory; however, rules and guidelines ensure the general safety of the individuals in the ring, as the purpose isn't so much to spill blood as it is to overcome your opponent by pinning them to the ground using a combination of skill, strategy and brute strength. Luchador rings are square shaped and roped off, unlike the circular pits most seen in the Old World for pit fighters. As are the ways of Myrmidia martial weapons are not allowed in these matches, but loopholes have allowed the use of chairs, debris and other various non-lethal items thrown into the ring to be commonly used by luchadors in an attempt to gain an advantage in a fight.

Luchadors and their wrestling culture has a strong mixture of performance art and aesthetic iconography, with many luchadors taking on unique themes based on different cultures or religions from across the world. Luchadors sport exotic masks that cover most of their facial features—these help them to play a character to help excite the crowd and allow the crowd to recognize the wearer. El Hombre Muertos for instance is a legendary Morrian luchador who dresses in black and purple, wears a mask with a skull pattern and cites scripture from the Libro Dei Morti to intimidate his opponents before a match.

These themes modeled after the eccentric characteristics from the diestros of Estalia combined with the intense wrestling of the Tileans make for a unique and highly popular spectacle for the people of both cultures to enjoy. Its popularity has recently spread to the Old World, with Magritta and Miragliano now housing their own leagues of luchador wrestling, with other species such as Dwarfs, Halflings and even Ogres having begun to participate in the sport. Its popularity has allowed many luchadors to grow extremely wealthy in the process as they win matches and rise through the ranks to earn championship titles and become legends that will be remembered for centuries.

"By the honor of mi familia and in the name of Myrmidia, I challenge YOU El Toro Furioso to a championship match! Should you refuse, your cowardice shall stain your legacy for eternity! You, me and all of Magritta. We will see who is the real Campeón del Magritta is."—Raymundo El Fénix, Legendary Luchador from the New World

Mamluk

Human

Mamluks are members of the warrior elite of Araby and refers to non-Arabyan slave soldiers, freed slaves, converts to the Cult of the Great Prophet assigned to military and administrative duties, and Arabyan rulers of slave origin. The most prominent Mamluk realm is the knightly military class in which occupy Lashiek, Martek and Copher, which developed from the ranks of slave soldiers. These are mostly enslaved nomadic peoples, Tileans, Estalians, Bretonnians and various other peoples from realms frequently attacked by corsairs. They're bought and sold to military officials, nobles and private orders to place in their armies until either they've died or earned their freedom. Many Mamluks are also of Border Prince origin as the greed of some of the individual principalities is great enough to sell some of their subjects to their desert dwelling neighbors.

The knightly orders of Araby are often the first association people make when thinking about the Mamluks—armored in lamellar and riding their horses or camels into battle, cutting down huge swaths of Greenskins and undead in a single unstoppable charge. The honor and bravery shown over their countless centuries of service has done more than enough to earn them the eternal gratitude of Araby's many people. Much like their janissary counterparts, the Mamluks of Araby are run through rigorous amounts of education and training, with a structure similar to that of the knightly orders found in the rest of the Old World. Once trained for battle, Mamluks are expected to hold the values and traditions of their order and their faith above all else—to live and die serving as the swords of the Great Prophet is paramount.

Equally as dangerous on foot as they are on a mount, Mamluks are highly prized elite infantry and cavalry within Araby. Once their masters die or they've earned their freedom by other means, Mamluks can often find employment without much, if any, issue. Due to the broken state Araby is in, Mamluks can often be found travelling and selling their services across a wide range of locations, up to and including the Old World. Their adventurous spirit combined with years of training and education make them prime for mercenary work, with some of them returning home relished with newfound wealth and becoming an Amir in their own right. These lords and commanders would in turn continue the cycle, leading great armies, some establishing their own knightly orders and purchasing slaves to be trained and educated as Mamluks under their strict guidance.

"Dem 'umies are a real pain to krump! When you fink you gottem dey always find a new way to make even da 'Ard Boyz look soft! Dey pour outta da gate, hackin' an' slashin' their way through my boyz, and dem useless Gobboz can't even pelt 'em wit arrers!"—Gaznak Eyesqueezer, Orc Boss attempting to siege Al-Haikk

Man-At-Arms (Created by Noah "FBV" A.)

Human Bretonnian Peasant

You are a Man-at-Arms, a lowborn soldier nonetheless capable of fighting well, and you serve at the pleasure of your lord.

Though noble knights are the most prominent and famous of the forces of Bretonnia, it is humble, lowborn Men-at-Arms who make up the bulk of Bretonnian armies. Whether they be simple peasant levies, given basic weapons and little training, or professional soldiers with sturdy equipment and ample pay, Men-at-Arms are ubiquitous in any Bretonnian fighting force.

Experienced Men-at-Arms are just as capable as the noble knights, though rarely as well-equipped. Men-at-Arms know when to be noticed, when to fight hard, and when to run.

Men-at-Arms can be seen all across Bretonnia and even beyond, defending their homes or campaigning in foreign lands for their lords.

Between musters, Men-at-Arms often occupy themselves with garrison duty and other forms of service or return to non-military jobs. Many will accompany noble lords and knights on quests, or travel to perform tasks on behalf of their masters. Some turn to adventure, mercenary work, or banditry during these extended periods of leave.

"Young Jean-Marie is out there with the other lads. He's been practicing standing straight all last year, we hope milord will pick him to be a man-at-arms!" --Eudes Bisset, L'Anguillian Peasant

"Kid, I've seen enough war for three lifetimes. It's all shit. Sure, we march and charge at the Duke's command, and we bow and scrape nice and good for him. But when the clash begins? Best hope The Lady is watching over you, for the Duke sure isn't."
--Onfroï, Paravonnese Man-at-Arms

Marine

Dwarf, Gnome, Halfling, High Elf, Human

“Marines are ship-borne soldiers who can be found in the Imperial fleet and onboard the larger private vessels. Marines protect their ships from pirates, Norse marauders, and other raiders. Unlike seamen, whose primary duty is sailing the ship, Marines are onboard only to fight. When in port, Marines frequently form press gangs to fill out the ship’s crew. More than one unsuspecting citizen has awoken at sea after taking a belaying pin to the head from an overzealous press ganger. Due to these activities, and their own drunken brawling, Marines are resented in many seaside communities. When raiders attack, however, these same citizens are quick to accept the aid of battle-hardened Marines.”

—Warhammer Wiki

Despite their reputation within the Empire as part soldier and part thug, the word “Marine” is used as a description for any kind of maritime combatant. Within the lands of Ulthuan, the High Elves house and train powerful maritime warriors known as the Lothern Seaguard, masters of ship-to-ship combat and renown marksman. The Dwarfs of Barak-Varr house the largest fleet within the Dwarfen realms and field powerful sea-savvy warriors to fend off the endless tide of Greenskins from the Badlands and aid in sending ironclad warships to fend off Norscan invaders across the Sea of Claws. Even amongst the Empire there are distinguished regiments of Marines who do not fit the typical stereotype often associated with their rough reputation. The armies of Ostland and Nordland maintain powerful fleets armed with highly trained and respected marine corps, such as the Nordland Seahawks. So, while the typical marine is often visualized as a brutish, war-torn human sailor prone to shady dealings and drunken barfights, the requirements for what truly categorizes a marine is broad enough to encompass a much wider range of brave men and women across the Old World.

“Labouring hard with a shovel in the darkness, stoking a massive boiler and bathing in the heat. Life on board an Ironclad, eh? Just like being at home.”—‘One-eye’ Morgim, Sea Engineer aboard the Legend of Grinnir

“Eataine does not field a citizen militia as all the other provinces do, instead contributing the Lothern Sea Guard to the Phoenix King’s armies. Unlike the normal levy, they are not only called up in times of need, but remain at arms at all times. The riches of our people are great, and the legends greater still, so there is never any shortage of villainous cut-throats who will stoop to any depths to steal their way into our fair capital and plunder our ancestral wealth.”—Recounted by Unthwe Windrider, Herald of the Phoenix King

Ninja

Human Cathayan or Nipponese

“Ninja Assassins are indispensable members of a Samurai lord's retinue, dark agents of death who prey upon the unwary and slay them without mercy. They remain disguised within regiments of ordinary troops until it is time for them to spring. Once a regiment is engaged in hand-to-hand combat, the assassin throws off his disguise, leaps out of the regiment, and may attack any important figures in the enemy regiment. They can fight unarmed, or with a wide variety of weapons, such as the kusarigama (a sickle on a length of cord or light chain that can be thrown or used as a hand weapon), shuriken or throwing stars, and torinoko grenades (which can be loaded with explosives, blinding flash powder, or confusing firecrackers).”—Warhammer Wiki

The ninja are stealth soldiers and mercenaries hired mostly by daimyos. Their primary roles are those of espionage and sabotage, although many assassinations are also attributed to ninja. Although they're considered the anti-samurai and are disdained by those belonging to the samurai class, they are necessary for warfare and are even employed by the samurai themselves to carry out operations that are forbidden by the Bushido.

Despite their roots in Nippon, Ninja have spread widely across the far East, occupying Cathay in equally great numbers and establishing secret conclaves as far as Marienburg.

In hushed whispers it is rumored these ninjas from Nippon and Cathay are the ones that inspired the culmination of the Skaven Clan Eshin. No one is sure how they accomplished such a feat, but this greatly angered the numerous Ninja clans in the Far East and has led to an intense and never-ending shadow war between the two races with their respective talents.

Besides organized bands of ninjas, there are many freelance ninjas who offered their services to the highest bidder in the unsettled times across Nippon's history. Crafty leaders in Marienburg sometimes employ ninjas, such as Master Genin Toko who serves Venk Katswaran of the Golden Lotus, to infiltrate and assassinate rivals, nobles and other threats to their businesses and their country as whole. In order to make sure ninjas within a group are who they should be passwords are used at random. A ninja is supposed to stand whenever they hear the password, and anyone left seated is thus exposed.

The tactics of subterfuge, ambush and trickery and their use of projectile weapons means that ninjas do not enjoy the high reputation that samurai warriors (perhaps not entirely unfairly) acquire for being chivalrous and courageous. The feeling is mutual, as ninjas and samurai notoriously don't work well together.

“It is not what you can see but what you cannot see that is the true threat. It is when you feel safest that you're your most vulnerable.”—Okubo Toko, Master Ninja of Marienburg

Norscan Seer

Human Norscan

“Seers are self-appointed authorities on all matters involving the spiritual world. They can be found in marketplaces of any town, proclaiming their latest revelation to anyone who will listen. Since Seers operate outside the bounds of sanctioned religious laws, and purport to understand the will of the Gods, they are easy targets for persecutions by Witch Hunters, who don't draw a line of distinction between the authentic seers and the charlatans. In Norsca, however, Seers are valued members of a Jarl's entourage, reading the signs and portents in the entrails of their sacrifice or translating the flickers of fire to divine some glimpse of future events.

A seer is a useful source of information, ranging from arcane matters to mundane occurrences. As such, they are in constant demand by people of all walks of life. Seers often accompany the retinue of a jarl. If a jarl has had a weird dream, witnessed a star falling from the heavens, or experienced any other portent, he will approach his seer for an interpretation of the omen. No seer is foolish enough to give an answer that might displease their master, so the truth is always caged in platitudes.

Those seers who live among the community face a tide of petitioners throughout the day. To weed out those who might come with trivial questions, seers often dwell in remote locations; only the most persistent will bother making the journey. The gifts that visitors bring sustain the seer in food, drink and clothes. A few seers see themselves as prophets, speaking for the gods, and travel from settlement to settlement preaching about the omens that they have seen. However, when their words warn of doom and woe, they quickly outstay their welcome and are often driven into the wilderness by an angry mob.

Some seers take up a wandering lifestyle, travelling between farms and villages to offer their esoteric services in return for food and shelter; for example, they might divine the future of a farmer's crop or the success of a trader's impending voyage. They also present themselves at the birth of a child and search it for marks that betray the gods' favor... or displeasure.

The Vikti are the healers and local shamans for most Norscan tribes. Admittedly, most Norseman spellcasters are Sorcerers, Witches, and Warlocks. All of these mystics draw their power from the Dark Gods channelling Dhar to suit their needs. Still, in some parts of Norsca, an older tradition remains: one placing emphasis on divination, healing, and prophecy. Whilst most include them in the pantheon of corrupt Daemonologists, Vitki are not blatant servants of the Ruinous Powers, and instead work their magic to aid their people.”—Warhammer Wiki

“The only men the gods speak to are seers, and they pay a terrible price for this gift.”

—Einarr ‘Steelfist’ Sigdansson, Champion of Tzeentch

“But only deeds of blood and madness draw the Dark One's gaze...”

—The Saga of Khalac Swordsson

Paymaster

Dwarf, Gnome, Halfling, High Elf, Human

The only thing that defines a mercenary company more than its reputation, fighting capability and leaders is this: Money. Without money the whole operations falls apart. The same can be said for most militaries, but whereas a Middenlander soldier is paid a wage it is reasonable to assume in a time of war most would still lay down their lives to defend their homes till their dying breathe for their honor, duty and loved ones. Not so from a mercenary company whose sole purpose is to profit off of conflict and instability. Coin is the lifeblood of any company worth its salt, and only one member has the courage, knowledge and capabilities to keep the books clean and the men paid—the Paymaster.

The Paymaster guards the company's currency with their life—literally so because they always carry the army's pay chest with them. The pay chest is a heavy, iron-bound, secure-looking affair that the paymaster brings to battle on a cart, pulled by animals such as donkeys or draught horses, with the more seasoned paymasters acquiring tougher animals. Paymasters who have proven themselves to their company are often accompanied by the most elite troops as guards that ride alongside and defend the paymaster's chest with their lives. The cart is provided with a suitably impressive flag that also serves as the army's standard so that the troops can see exactly where the Paymaster is at all times, something they find reassuring.

Paymasters come from all over the Old World and beyond but are predominantly and most highly paid within the Southern Realms. Lawyers, politicians, accountants, merchants and nobles with a spine are the predominant careers often associated with paymasters, leaving their old lives and using their expertise to make substantially more coin and quench their thirst for adventure and lusts for power. It is often touted that the most important person on the battlefield, aside from the mercenary generals themselves, are in fact the paymaster. They're capable combatants in their own rights, often paying the elite troops and experienced officers larger sums of coin to teach them how to fight more effectively during battle.

"It is said that 'oney motivates neither the best people nor the best in people'... if that is true, we may not the best people but we are absolutely the best paid..."—Leandro Cerulli, Paymaster of Braganza's Besiegers

"No, they didn't look dangerous, more like a bunch of rich kids out to show off in their new armour. Very flashy they were, all gems and silk. We'll have a bit of fun, we thought. Easy pickings, we thought. Well anyone can make a mistake. Poor old captain Malvino, last mistake he ever made..."—Overheard in the Old Pig and Whistle, Marienburg

Portrait of a Merchant by Jon Gossaert, 1530

Rajput Warrior

Human Indan

The land of Ind is a mysterious and wondrous place. To the far east, beyond the Mountains of Mourn stands the Land of a Thousand Gods. Many kingdoms pepper this sacred land as the people of Ind, much like their western counterparts, are prone to war on all sides--from Greenskins and Chaos to between bickering kingdoms seeking conquest and glory.

At the heart of Ind lies its caste system, with merchants, artists, the peasantry and the like at the lower. The warrior and noble caste reigns supreme with the elite warriors of Ind being the very bridge that links the two together, the Rajput. These legendary warriors hold great status over the people as valiant warriors, duelists, mercenaries and are seen as arbiters of the gods' wills. Their tremendous sense of duty combined with years of education and training gives them a much greater edge over the traditional militia forces and mercenaries often seen around Ind.

They can often be found traveling the Spice Road, defending caravans from Dark Elf raiders, hobgoblins and hostile ogre tribes littering the trail. This has granted them a huge amount of renown among the merchant class in Ind and even Cathay, carving through the worst many travelers have to contend with on their dangerous travels to the Empire and beyond. Their combat style imitates like a dance of death, mimicking the elegance and combat prowess of their god Shaivi.

To this day the Rajput remain Ind's best forces when facing the horrors that plague its numerous kingdoms with a style that mimics that of a dance on the battlefield. This comes at a great cost and heavily weighs on their soul, as they face endless invasions from the chaotic Hung and vile ratmen below. Their piety and worship to the three Great Gods of the Ind pantheon is all that keeps them sane: Brahmira the Creator, Vaishna the Protector and Shaivi the Destroyer are to the warriors and people of Ind what Sigmar, Myrmidia and Ulrich are to the people of the west.

To the Rajput to fight is to serve their gods, all of them, in some way: For Brahmira they fight to allow their people to flourish, living their lives in peace to create and cherish the lives given to them by their gods; for Vaishna they fight to protect their lands, homes, people and honor; and for Shaivi they seek to destroy the corruption eating at the heart and soul of Ind, purging it for reasons akin to the Witch Hunters of the Empire.

"The devotion of the Rajput is still paid to his arms, as to his horse. He swears 'by the steel,' and prostrates himself before his defensive buckler, his whip, his sword, or his dagger."—Sir Arthur Micheaux, Bretonnian Explorer

"Chivalry and heroism are as much a part of their blood as honour and pride. Enough to save my hide from those long-eared raiders." —Hein Prangsmas, Marienburg Merchant

Man in Armor by Edwin Lord Weeks

Reaver

Human Norscan

"The life of a reaver is tightly woven to the ship he works on, and the long days often start as the reavers guide the vessel through the fierce northern seas. Breakfast is gulped down in a corner that gives some protection from the wind, and normally washed down with strong spirits to keep a fire in his belly. Unless some prey is sighted, the day continues as it began, until the reaver has the chance to eat an evening meal and tie himself in to grab some sleep. However, once a suitable target is spotted, whether it is a ship or a coastal village, everything changes. The reavers quickly bring the ship around to fall upon their target at full speed, seeking gain the element of surprise and overwhelm their opponent quickly. As they approach, the bare minimum of men are assigned to continue crewing the vessel, while everyone else gears for battle and readies weapons.

When the ship comes close, reavers leap from their deck straight into the action, charging in with battle cries and cutting down any who stand in their way. Even those who try to flee are chased down; reavers enjoy their bloody work and seldom leave survivors. Once everyone is dead, or fled, the reavers gather their loot. Valuables are stored in the hold of their ship, while food and drink is consumed in great celebratory feasts. The crew sets out again from land, out of the reach of those who might seek revenge. Once back on the seas, many of the reavers who participated in the raid drink themselves into a mighty stupor, which may last until the next raid.

The practice of slavery is as old as Humanity, originating in the ancient empire of Khemri, and continued through the various civilizations that rose and fell in the intervening years, leading to the present day. In an evolving economy, slavery is simply impractical. In places like Bretonnia, serfs perform all the work and live lives little better than slaves, but in the Empire, men and women, whilst Peasants, are in charge of their own destinies. Of course, in some remote corners of the Old World, the practice flourishes. Araby is famed for its flesh markets as is Sartosa and even some dark corners in Marienburg. The Norsemen take slaves as well, either from surrendered adversaries or as plunder from one of their raids. Occasionally, they have reason to traffic with unsavory flesh dealers, and some enterprising Norsemen take up the profession. Norscan Warleaders are proven Norsemen warriors who've seen countless battles and are entrusted by their Jarls and Kings to lead detachments of other warriors and Marauders against their enemies. Typically, Warleaders bear many strange tattoos, ritual scars, and most, if not all, have one or more mutations, showing they have the favor of the Gods."—Warhammer Wiki

"And then those sails appeared on the horizon. White, but dripping with the bloody symbols of their foul gods. And then came the black wood of the boats, dragged through the froth by tireless, muscled arms pulling on a hundred oars. I rang the warning bell from my lookout and me lads formed up, each one sweating at the arrival of these beasts. The crossbowmen loosed bolt after bolt, and many fell, but still the howling fiends ran up the beaches with no care for armor or shields. They looked like rabble, but fought like daemons, crashing through our lines, butchering men left and right, clubbing limbs into gore and hacking heads from bodies like they were attached with butter. I'll never forget that morning..."

—Account transcribed from an Ostland sergeant, 2517 IC.

Ronin

Human Nipponese

The term Ronin refers to samurai who, as a result of either losses in battle, the untimely death of their lord or master, or their own misdeeds, have been dispossessed of their fief and their noble sponsorship. Under normal circumstances, samurai who would dishonor themselves are conditioned to commit seppuku—a ritualistic form of suicide meant to preserve the samurai's honor in death, but this is not always the case. In these tumultuous times their numbers have increased rapidly; they remained a great cause of disorder throughout the land of Nippon and Cathay, becoming mercenaries, guards, bandits and crime lords. They are no less deadly in combat than their noble brethren the Samurai, but their freedom from many of the rules and regulations binding them to their duties from both the Bushido Code and their lords makes them significantly more dangerous to cross. While samurai are certainly capable of their own cruelties and enforce unfair laws against the common people, the Ronin are considered honor-less and need not hold themselves to the same standard.

In the late-25th century IC many impoverished samurai were attracted to the employment of Western foreigners from the country of Westerland as a chance to restore some of their lost wealth and status. Large numbers of Ronin dissatisfied with their current treatment, or out of boredom, left for these foreign lands spreading to parts of the Empire, Bretonnia, Estalia and Tilea searching for work in various fields. The vast majority end up taking criminal work in some form or another; banditry is common, as is becoming gang enforcers and utilizing their years of training and discipline to climb through the ranks and start their own criminal empires. Those that follow this path are referred to as Yakuza and are the bane of law enforcement.

Not all Ronin are so ruthless. While many suffer great misfortune, it isn't uncommon for them to perform great acts of kindness. Adventuring and exploration are in their blood as much as any other nomadic warrior of their kind, and tales of bands of Ronin fighting off Greenskin, Beastmen and bandit incursions to protect villages and innocent lives are just as common as their tales of brutality and ruthlessness. In recent years tales have sprung around the Empire and beyond of men and women in strange robes entering towns clearing them of criminals, invaders and hidden chaos cultists asking for nothing more than a cup of tea and a night's rest. The most famous is a man who goes by the name of "Jack", a Ronin dressed in white and grey foreign robes, wearing a straw hat; he is said to have slaughtered Beast Lords, Orc Bosses and Skaven Warlords in single combat across Estalia, Tilea and the Empire. He asks for little if anything in return. Despite no one knowing his true name, when a Tilean noble of Miragliano asked him for anything he desired after preventing a Skaven invasion from besetting the city the Ronin merely asked he be given a new name befitting of a local commoner. The people of Miragliano voted and the title of "Jack" was granted to him for his actions in protecting the mighty principality. It is rumored many of the ratmen's assassins have failed in their attempts to stop Jack's acts of altruism.

"Nothing worth having is easily attained... Sometimes you must fight for what is yours... and what you believe in. Until they get to know the real you, people's stereotypes don't mean much. I came here to live free, not die for money."—Jack, Old World Ronin

Samurai

Human Nipponese

"Traders from Marienburg in the Old World have reached Nippon since at least 2475 IC. This has led to the establishment of a large Nipponese community in Nipponstaad, between the Paleisbuurt and the Handelaarmarkt, and next to the Cathayans of Zijdemarkt within Marienburg."—Warhammer Wiki

Samurai are the hereditary military nobility and officer caste of Nippon and have been for thousands of years. They are the well-paid retainers of the daimyo (the great feudal landholders) having high prestige and special privileges such as being granted a high education and wearing two swords. They cultivate the bushido codes of martial virtues, indifference to pain, and unflinching loyalty, engaging in many local battles against rival clans, Greenskins, ogres, Skaven and Daemons.

As aristocrats for millennia, samurai have developed their own cultures that influence Nippon as a whole. The culture associated with the samurai such as the tea ceremony, monochrome ink painting, rock gardens and poetry was adopted by warrior patrons throughout the decades -160 to -120 IC. These practices were adapted from the Cathayan arts. Celestial monks introduced them to Nippon and they were allowed to flourish due to the interest of powerful warrior elites. The Grandmaster of Heaven at the time was the monk who was advisor to both the Emperor and his close partner, the Shogun at the time, in an attempt to bridge relations between the two great powers. The Grand Master, as well as other monks, served as a political and cultural diplomat between Nippon and Cathay. The Grandmaster was particularly well known for his garden design. The Celestial Monks even brought along Sword Saints from the mainland to help advise and train the warrior caste of Nippon, teaching them the secrets to numerous swords fighting and bladesmith techniques, and their codes of honor.

However, relations fell apart upon the reveal of an ulterior motive within the courts of Cathay, as sinister forces (rumored to be servants of Tsien-Tsin, also known as Tzeentch) within its political structure attempted to subjugate the island nation, leading to war. The people of Nippon, fiercely determined, united under the Shogunate and fought off a massive invasion spearheaded by Cathay. Through centuries of fighting, Nippon perfected its own craft of swordsmanship and successfully repelled the forces of Grand Cathay in a bloody war of independence.

The country has since been divided and fractured into competing warring states and has been for many centuries. Since contact was reached with Marienburg, many samurai have found themselves travelling to the far west, into Westerland and Marienburg out of curiosity and a search for wealth, knowledge and power. They bare the mark of their clans and parade in their exquisite armor, a symbol of the pride and honor of the people of Nippon—an honor they are willing to defend and die for at any cost.

"Bushido is realized in the presence of death. This means choosing death whenever there is a choice between life and death. There is no other reasoning."—Yamamoto Tsunetomo, Nippon Philosopher and Poet

"The only other things I've seen more willing to die over honour are the bloody Slayers."—Omar Von Schmetterling, Mercenary Captain from Westerland

Sartosan Pirate

Dwarf, Gnome, Halfling, Human

"The Decadent Pirate Principality of Sartosa, known more politely by its swashbuckling inhabitants as The Free City of Sartosa or simply the City of Pirates, is an anarchic pirate island-stronghold located within the southern reaches of war-torn Tilea, off the coast of the Tilean city-state of Luccini. This island is a notorious haven for criminals, harboring all manner of pirates, brigands, lawless mercenaries and anyone wanting to avoid the various legitimate powers of the Old World. It is a tremendously dangerous place, where drunken pirates press-gang unsuspecting individuals, brawls and duels are an hourly occurrence, and thieves ply the dirty, crowded docks looking for easy marks. Despite the risks, however, it is a place where someone with the toughness and willpower to survive can not only live but thrive, far from the yoke of unfair taxes, overbearing noblemen, and stringent laws. From Sartosa to Araby in the south, the Border Princes to the East, and the mainland past the Great Ocean, exotic lands await. In short, Sartosa is a perfect place for finding fame, plunder and endless adventure."—Warhammer Wiki

The pirates of Sartosa are amongst the most infamous threats on the high seas, standing neck-and-neck with the Dark Elf and Arabyan corsairs of Sartosa's east and south respectively, and the Norscan raiders to the far north. They loot and pillage patrolling merchant ships, seizing cargo and making off with small fortunes on a routine basis. Sartosa itself has suffered many invasions from foreigners over the millennia it has existed and come out on top each time through grit and blood. Ironically, the pirates of Sartosa enforce a strict Pirate's Codes, preventing deserters, cheaters and other scallywags from endangering the crew:

- Everyone shall obey orders from the Captain and their officers.
- A crewman has the right to defend themselves and their honor.
- A crewman can challenge another to a fair duel, but the challenged gets choice of weapons. No other person can interfere in this duel until one crewman is dead or relents.
- Booty will be shared out as follows: 1 share to every ordinary seaman; 3 shares to the captain; 2 shares to the master carpenter, boatswain, and gunner.
- Anyone caught attempting to desert will be marooned. They may take only a weapon and a bottle of water.
- Anyone being lazy or failing to clean their weapons will lose their share of the booty.
- The punishment for hitting a crewman is 40 lashes on the bare back.
- Everyone may vote on every important decision.
- Everyone may have a share of captured drink and fresh food.
- Anyone found stealing from another member of the crew will have their ears and nose slit open and be set ashore.
- The penalty for bringing a lover aboard in disguise is death.
- No one may leave the crew until each crewman has made 500 GC.
- No crewmember may fraternize with Wizards or other dealers of the Dark Arts.

While most pirates work with a crew, it's not uncommon to see many of them strike it rich on their own, as mercenaries or privateers, before fully investing in a crew and ship to avoid the penalties for leaving a crew early—though many do so anyways if the captain is incompetent or the pay is weak.

"As soon as their jolly boat touched the sand they roared ashore, charging the waiting Goblins. It was a short fight. Within moments the Greenskins were running for their lives and the pirates were rewarding themselves with a swift tot of rum!"

—Von Mirrenburg, accounting the tale of the infamous Long Drong and his Slayer pirates.

Skald

Human Norscan

“Skalds are the keepers of lore, the chroniclers of the histories of the Norse. Part entertainer, part warrior, these individuals are held in high esteem for their wisdom and knowledge. All Kings keep Skalds in their retinues, as do most Jarls. When the call for war is sounded, the Skald bears the banner and marches to battle with his comrades.

The skald rises at an early hour, as soon as the breakfast fires in the Jarl’s great hall are kindled. After all, he would be grieved to miss any pertinent gossip (and heartbroken to miss impertinent gossip). Also, the skald may have enemies (at least, he will if he’s any good) and in Norsca it is wise to wake before those who hate you. A skald is a learned man, contemplating the written sagas of the Norse and talking to his elders about their recollections. He may also be a musician and, if so, will spend time practicing his craft. The skald has his ears open for news of recent events, and his eyes on any behavioral quirks of members of the jarl’s court. The skald performs one function above all others—offering entertaining and irreverent commentary on current affairs.

When the night draws in the jarl may preside over a feast and call the skald to perform. The skald sings the sagas of the Norsemen and plays sweet music. As mead flows the Northmen call for more ribald entertainment and the skald employs his skills as a mimic and comedian, mocking those in attendance, and even parodying the jarl himself.

The skald treads a fine line. If he’s careful, he will be heaped with praise and fame, and even given the honor of bearing the Jarl’s banner in times of war. Most Northmen pride themselves on being able to take a good joke, so the Skald is confident that his targets will probably take it in good humor. However, if he takes his act too far, he may find himself hewn apart by an offended reaver.”
—Warhammer Wiki

“They came out of the North, bringing with them fire and ruin. Not since the Great War Against Chaos had the Empire seen so furious an invasion from the barbarian worshipers of the Dark Gods. Is this war a madman’s quest for revenge, or is it the beginning of the end?”

A Skald Reciting to Northmen

Swordsaint

Human Cathayan or Nipponese

Cathay, the great empire of the far east, is the oldest human empire and among the most powerful of the human realms on the planet. Its armies are said to number from the hundreds-of-thousands to the millions, dwarfing its neighbors in raw manpower and overrunning even Greenskins in numerical supremacy. From the capital in Weijin to the heavily defended north of Cathay in Nan-Gau and southern forts bordering the tainted land of Khuresh in Xianbei, the subjects of the Celestial Dragon Emperor fight on a regular basis to defend their homeland from the tainted forces of Chaos. Skaven, Ogres, Beastmen, Greenskins and relentless invasions by the barbaric Hung tribes of the north have tested Cathay time and again for millennia, much like the Empire of man to the West. However through Cathay's many thousands of years of history in art, warfare and magic, they have perfected the ultimate warriors—the Swordsaints.

A celestial order defined by their unwavering loyalty to the Emperor, the Swordsaints of Cathay are expert duelists of almost mythical status. Their mastery of the sword has earned them much fear and renown from both their allies and enemies. They train relentlessly, mastering techniques and styles unheard-of outside the East. With decades of practice, preparation and study put into each stroke, their combat prowess is perfected through years of aggressive fighting against the greatest of their enemies' champions, with Chaos Warriors of the Hung, Ogre Bruisers and innumerable Greenskin Bosses being but a few examples. Masters of the art cut these foes down relentlessly over their many decades of life, with the greatest of champions granted a personal audience with the mysterious Celestial Dragon Emperor himself, gifted his blessing (not too dissimilar to The Cult of the Lady in Bretonnia) and granted a legendary Jade Longsword forged by the master smith—the Gold Wizards of Cathay.

The Swordsaints are nomadic in nature, travelling the lands of Cathay and beyond and aiding the people of the land when they can. They are considered kind and approachable by the people of Cathay, as many of the more prominent Swordsaints are descendants of commoners and peasants who don't suffer the same dissociation with the common people unlike nobility—unusual of an order of such prestige. It is skill and not class that is sought after within its divine order, a similarity they share with the monks within the Mountains of Heaven. Many Swordsaints are remembered through shrines and statues built in their honor for their great deeds and defense of the people with each subsequent saint having a terracotta soldier made in their honor and likeness outside the Emperor's palace in Weijin to protect him—even in death. In Nippon, the Swordsaints are held in higher esteem among the warrior caste, as it was they who taught the samurai many of the techniques, arts and strategies they now associate with their kenjutsu and Bushido code. Those who follow the older ways of Cathay in Nippon society are known as the Kensai. In recent years, with the bridging of relations between the far East and the outsiders from Marienburg, Swordsaints have started traveling themselves abroad, to new lands not yet discovered, new cultures to explore, new people to defend and new challenges to face.

"Know your enemy and know yourself and you can fight a hundred battles without disaster."—Shu Tsunzi, Cathayan General

Vampire Hunter

Human

"Vampire Hunters are driven souls who seek to destroy the Undead by any means necessary. Many of them have lost friends and family members to the Restless Dead, most often to their namesake. Since any but the most cursory knowledge of the Undead is a forbidden subject in the Empire, vampire hunters are a self-made lot. They congregate quietly with others of their ilk; sharing what little knowledge they've gleaned from their more successful encounters with the forces of the Restless Dead in hopes of one day finding a sure method of killing vampires.

A vampire hunter's daily life is long hours of fear, hatred, and endurance interrupted by episodes of mind-jarring terror and bloody carnage. As the sun rises the hunter sets about his work, for he knows that only during the day can he enjoy even the illusion of safety. Combining equal measures of caution and haste, he must gather clues of his prey, telltale signs all the Undead leave in their wake. This can include tracking and gathering gossip or hours of research and study on long dead families and forgotten locals.

Then, if the day is not over, the hunter will try and corner his quarry while it sleeps. More often, there will be days, weeks, or even years of pursuit as vampires are a canny, intelligent, and illusive foe. This means that at the end of each day, fearful of discovery, the hunter must find a defensible place to hole up and wait with stake and hammer for the dawn. Sleep is found only fleetingly for the vampire hunter, always by day, and usually beneath the rays of the sun. This cycle continues until the hunter is successful, or more likely, becomes the hunted.

The profession of vampire hunter is not one many choose willingly. They are often driven to it because of something that happened in their life. Often this is revenge for someone slain by the vampire, though there are occasionally other reasons."

—Warhammer Wiki

"They cannot outrun me for long. The sun will see to that."
—Anonymous Vampire Hunter

"I say you can find out the servants of Death by their marks. No man is born so unnatural that his body does not revolt at the foul pollution of Undead blood. And by these marks you can tell them: by the fangs of the predator, for their thirst for blood is like that of a foul beast; by their porcelain white skin, cold to the touch and unnatural to the eye; the glow of their eyes, behind which lives the terrible Hunger. These are the marks of the blackest evil. These are the marks of the Vampire..."

Vimto Monk

Human Nipponese

“Like many Orientals, Nipponese worship a common god called the Orange Simca, whose monks wear orange robes and spend most of their time in contemplation. Vimto is the martial version of Simcism. Nippon abounds with diverse orders of monks, either martial or clerical. The Orders select their members at a very early age and the chosen ones devote their entire lives to philosophy, theology and the martial arts. A lifetime of grueling study hones their bodies and minds to a very fine edge.”—Warhammer Wiki

Vimto monks are the warrior priests of Nippon. The naginata is the weapon most often associated with them, though many warrior monks are known to be proficient with everything from bow and arrow to tantō and wakizashi (dagger and short sword). Vimto monks, like most other warrior monks of related sects, wear robes to distinguish themselves from other soldiers and samurai, with a series of white or orange kimono-like robes in layers, one over the other, usually white underneath, and tan or saffron yellow on top. Vimto monks often fold and tie the white head cowl to cover more of their head.

Finally, many warrior monks wear some form of light samurai armor, usually reinforced leather. The Vimto employ a variety of weapons. The belt of the kimono is often supplemented with a heavier sash, so a sword could be slung from it. The long tachi was probably the most common sword, though many monks may carry tantō as well. Many monks are also accomplished archers. The most traditional weapon of the monk, however, was the naginata. Their ancient enemy is that of the Skaven. Ever since clan Eshin stole the art of stealth and assassination from Nippon and Cathay they have used their abilities to kill many key members in the monk’s priesthood. With a lack of leadership, the Skaven thought it would cause the monks to weaken and fracture, possibly fighting amongst themselves like in other religions—but it backfired miserably. The Orange Simca herself is said to have granted visions to her followers commanding them to launch an endless crusade against the Children of the Horned Rat and not to rest until they have been purged from all of Nippon forever.

Their pious nature is said to grant them valuable gifts from the Orange Simca, Goddess of the Rising Sun, herself, giving them an unparalleled reputation as the living embodiment of the goddess. Seen as avatars of war, Daimyo often pay large sums of money to buy them off as mercenaries either to aid them in their campaigns of war or more commonly to avoid a conflict with them altogether. Ogres find the Vimto monks to be rather difficult competitors in the mercenary market and have launched many failed and bloody attempts to “outbid” their competition. Many ogre tribes in Nippon have had their contracts taken by the Vimto due to a sudden lack of “communication” between their employers and the ogres they initially planned to hire.

“There is no fear for one whose mind is not filled with desire. You must work out your own salvation and not depend on others, lest be taken advantage of and fall down the path to Chaos.”
--Noyamano Nobuo, High Priest of the Cult of Simca

“Up! Up into man-thing nest! Up to their streets and their cellars! Up to their granaries and their stockyards! Up to their homes and their temples! They kill-kill us! Revenge, yes-yes! Burn-burn the robed ones, for they-they have slain us many!”

Whaler

Human Norscan

Of the few honest trades most common amongst the Norscan people, nothing is more harrowing and dangerous than that of the Whalers.

“Norscan Whalers are not just typical hunters; they are also well-abled warriors. Since whaling is an important trade for Norsca, Whalers are respected even among the warriors due to the extreme dangers of the waters surrounding Norsca. Swimming through the dark currents of the Sea of Claws are massive whales, many of which bear strange markings, and odd coloration, twisted and warped as they are by the power of Chaos. These monsters can capsize ships and swallow hundreds of men in a single gulp. Thus, Whalers must be made of sterner stuff than ordinary fishermen. Whales provide not only meat but also blubber which can be processed into oil for fuel. Not an ounce of a whale is wasted: the skin is used to manufacture rope, the gullet to make shoes, and the stomach used as floats. Even the lungs and intestines are eaten. Demand from Imperial cities for whale oil to fuel streetlamps has made whaling a very profitable venture.

The easiest way to hunt these creatures is for whalers to embark in rowing boats and herd schools of small whales ashore where they can easily slaughter them. However, there is no honor in such methods, and Norsemen prefer the thrill of setting sail in a longship to chase the giant whales that plough the ocean. Many young men join such expeditions; it is the custom in many settlements that a girl should spurn a suitor who has not killed his first whale. A captain is careful to vet his crew, due to the belief that whales will attack boats crewed by dishonorable men. Norsemen relish the danger of hunting these monsters. When a whale is sighted, the rowers speed their vessel towards it. Harpooners gather at the prow and, when in range, hurl their weapons at their quarry. The bravest men leap from the boat onto the whale’s back, thrusting their spears deep into its flesh before swimming back to their vessel.

A skewered whale can easily capsize a longboat or tow the vessel by the harpoon lines until it shudders apart. Its tail can sweep a man overboard, where he will be swallowed whole in its maw. Few ships return home with a full crew. The harpooners must ensure a swift kill – the best can pierce a whale’s heart with a single throw. If this is impossible, whalers aim to embed their harpoons in the monster’s ribs, enabling the crew to drag it to the ship’s side where they can kill it with hooks and skewers. A whaling vessel will not return to shore unless it is towing a slaughtered whale. Whalers prefer a watery grave to the dishonor of returning empty-handed. When a whaling ship does return after a successful hunt, the gods are praised and celebrations continue for many days, for the survival of the settlement is ensured for the next few months.”—Warhammer Wiki

“We dine or we die. There is no ‘failure’ only success. A lost catch is a lost tribe.”—Ingvar Redwave, Norse Whaling Captain

Winged Lancer

Human Ungol or Gospodar

“The famous Winged Lancers of Kislev are mostly made up of young sons of Boyars from all across the lands. It is their duty to always be prepared for war, as invasions of Mother Kislev are an all too common occurrence to simply ignore. Even though they are themselves of only modest rank, the Lancers enjoy a great deal of respect from the people of Kislev for their role in protecting the nation. Each stanitsa or settlement is expected to provide a force of Winged Lancers for the mutual defense of the nation, which are often the focus of great civic pride.

Their standards have usually seen many battles and their loyalty is fanatical. The famed feathered wings are the invention of the great historical warrior, Tzar Alexandr Njevski, whose winged back banner emanated an eerie howl that no Chaos worshipper could endure. The winged lancers are a Gospodar tradition, and most Gospodar stanitsas support a rota, or squadron of them, often consisting of nearly all the men of the settlement.

These mounted warriors are famed for their elaborately decorated armor, most especially the large, feathered ‘wings’ mounted on their back that make an eerie sound when they charge. The rest of the armor is decorated as richly as the stanitsa can manage, as a matter of pride and the warriors only don their impressive armor immediately before battle to avoid damaging it in everyday use. Unsurprisingly, their primary weapon is the lance, but they also use swords for closer fighting, often discarding their lances after an initial charge. While not as manoeuvrable as the Ungol horse archers, they are still a highly mobile force and the mainstay of Kislevite armies. They are, however, not full-time soldiers and often seem more loyal to their home than to Tzarina Katarin. Nevertheless, they fight bravely against Chaos, and so the Ice Queen is more concerned with other political problems.”—Warhammer Wiki

“Aye, I fought the grobi in the High Pass with some of those horsemen with the feathered wings on their backs. Even though they looked as fancy as Elves, they’re good fighters, them boys. Noisy as a Mannish steam engine when they charge, but you oughta seen the grobi keck their loincloths when they heard them coming!”

—Snorri Stoneheart, Dwarf Longbeard.

Witch Doktor

Human Southlander

Witch Doktors are the primary healers in the Southlands. They are treated as both the physical and spiritual manifestations of their gods, The Old Ones. The eldest and wisest of the Witch Doktors are powerful sages capable of healing one par with even the most seasoned Jade Wizards. It is unknown how they managed to harness such potent healing capabilities, but Imperial Scholars theorize it has something to do with the Southlanders proximity to the Lizardmen Kingdoms and the Life Slanns.

Each chiefdom has its own Witch Doktors. Within the community they are treated as conduits to the gods, never to be harmed or insulted for fear of angering the spirits believed to live with them. Imperial scholars theorize this superstition came from past miscasts from lack of proper training. However, Witch Doktors start out no different than any other healer or doktor found within the Old World. They use traditional remedies and learn crude, but effective, forms of surgery, stitching up wounds and helping the poor with little to no pay for their services.

Witch Doktors seemingly operate only on altruism, taking the barest minimum earning to live peacefully despite working hard to keep the chiefdom's citizens and warriors in top and healthy shape. It is a fascinating act of human compassion that does not go with earning the respect and admiration of the people they save. By the time they do learn how to harness the Winds of Ghyran, Witch Doktors have already proven themselves as capable healers without any magical intervention. Harnessing the Winds is treated as a reward—a gift from the gods themselves for their service in preserving the lives and calming the spirits of the chiefdoms they inhabit.

Once they ascend, Witch Doktors are required to take on an apprentice as tradition. Not too dissimilar to the Colleges of Magic, apprentices are chosen after being magically sensed out by the more experienced magic caster. To the people of the Southlands this justifies the belief that Witch Doktors are chosen by the gods with the sages being the living conduits of their divine will.

“The Witch Doktor succeeds for the same reason all the rest of us succeed, despite their barbarism. Each patient carries his or her own doktor inside him or her. They come to us doktors not knowing the truth. We are at our best when we give the doktor who resides within each patient a chance to go to work. Southlanders know this too and have mastered the art of doktoring... to the chagrin of my colleagues.”—Dr. Hermann Schleiss, Professor at the Altdorf Physician's Guild

Zunu

Human Southlander

The Southlands are a land dominated by the trading empires of Araby, Cathay and the High Elves, with the Lizardmen Kingdoms being the leading military might that battles endlessly against the frequent swarms of Undead, Greenskins, Skaven and Chaos. However, the native human Southlanders are no slouch when it comes to fighting, their Zunu warriors being amongst the fiercest combatants on foot able to chase down their prey with lightning speed for days.

The organization of the Zunu armies are profoundly different to their professional Empire counterpart, a part-time citizen militia, the means by which a nation of herdsman come together periodically in national service. At the heart of the system are guilds. These guilds are a means of exercising central control over the most productive element in the group—its young men and women—and prior to the emergence of the Southlands Kingdoms thousands of years ago, each chiefdom raised its own guilds.

Every two or three years, young warriors who reach their late teens are called and gathered together at the royal homestead and form into a unit. They are given a regimental name, told to wear a specific uniform of feathers and furs on ceremonial occasions, with older veterans appointed as officers over them. These units then serve as the chiefdom's labor gang, police force, hunting-parties, and army. Although housed in special settlements while assembled, there is no infrastructure to support them for extended periods, and it is usual for them to disperse and return to their homes when they had performed their appointed tasks.

Zunu armies are mobilized quickly whenever invading forces come into notice. With the recent rise of the Southland Kings thanks to good relations with the Lizardmen, individual chiefdoms within the Southland Kingdoms have ceased to raise their own guilds, and the right to do so has become the prerogative of the kings. The guilds by 2500 IC number in the hundreds or even thousands of men apiece and are quartered when mustering in their large royal homesteads. A robust military ethic prevails amongst them, jealousy of their honors and distinctions being prevalent, with scuffles between guilds now common.

Uniformed war-shields were traditionally made using animal hide with weapons brought by the warrior. The long-bladed, thick hafted stabbing spear has remained the favorite for thousands of years. However, by the 2300's IC, due to bettering relations with the Lizardmen, seeing Southlanders as allies as ordained by The Great Plan, Zunu warriors are being increasingly equipped with Obsinite shields, spears, maces and blades forged by Skink Artisan-Priests. Some Zunu have even had the honor of fighting alongside the towering Saurus of the Lizardmen against the innumerable threats of the Southlands, with the most seasoned and battle-hardened receiving gifts and magical trinkets for their service. Some Southlanders even managed to learn and understand the Lizardmen Language of Saurian despite it being unpronounceable to other species.

"I need no bodyguard at all, for even the bravest creatures who approach me get weak at the knees and their hearts turn to water, whilst their heads become giddy and incapable of thinking as the sweat of fear paralyses them."—Impi Shuku, Skaven Butcher and Defender of Teotiqua

Nation Talents

Combat Might

Max: 3

Your strength of arms is so great you can wield weapons of massive size and weight with but one hand! You may wield any two-handed melee weapon with one hand with a -20 WS penalty. Any Melee Tests made wielding a two-handed weapon in one hand are replaced with Melee (Basic) as its primary Test. For each additional Talent level, the penalty is reduced by 10 until there is no penalty. At Talent level 3 you ignore any Slow or Tiring Weapon Flaws when wielding a melee weapon with both hands.

Dog of War

Max: None

You are an active mercenary making money from conflicts, and you're recognizable for it. For the purposes of securing money, either when Earning during play or performing an Income Endeavour, refer to the following table:

Career Level	Bonus Money per time the Talent is taken
1	+1d10 Silver Shillings
2	+2d10 Silver Shillings
3	+3d10 Silver Shillings
4	+1 Gold Crown

Because of your profession, you are bound to make enemies. Opposition to the employers who hire you for your services consider you lower Status than them and might even harbor additional Psychologies such as Prejudice or Hatred as determined by the GM—perhaps you have cost them a chunk of land, destroyed their business, killed a loved one of theirs or see you simply as foreign scum. Because of this, opposing forces such as military and law enforcement run by your contractor's enemies are always suspicious of you and your company and suspect your motivations, which only gets worse the more times you have this Talent, with the exact implications determined by the GM.

The scale of these oppositions might be something small such as villages or towns up to entire provinces or cities depending on the scale of the conflict. These penalties do not apply to mercenary work against widely opposed enemies of mankind, such as Beastmen, Greenskins, Dark Elves, Skaven or various monsters ravaging the countryside, among other known threats.

Lightning Strike

Max: Agility Bonus

Test: Melee Test concerning this Talent

Your blade is as swift as lightning! You strike before your opponent even has time to react. As an Action, you may spend all your Advantage to attempt a single Unopposed Melee Test against your target, so long as your opponent is using a weapon without the Fast Quality. This action requires a Fast Quality weapon and sacrifices your Free Action and remaining Movement, if any, for the remainder of the turn if used.

Mark of the Gods

Max: 1

You have dedicated your soul to the service of the Dark Gods. Each day, you must spend half a bell (half an hour) worshipping the Ruinous Powers. If you have the Frenzy Talent you may enter Frenzy immediately without testing. If you use Frenzy in this manner you must test against a Corrupting Influence requiring a Challenging (+0) Cool Test. At the beginning of each session, the first test is a Minor Exposure, with the second test being a Moderate Exposure and each following test being a Major Exposure. The Frenzy Talent is added to the Talent list of any career you are in.

Martial Artist

Max: Weapon Skill Bonus

Tests: Melee (Brawling)

You are a master of unarmed combat, capable of felling foes with your fists alone. Your Unarmed attacks no longer have the Undamaging Flaw. You may also Oppose incoming missile shots in your Line of Sight bare-handed. Roll an Opposed Melee (Brawling) against missiles being used against you, grabbing them harmlessly in mid-air if successful. Ranged weapons with the Blackpowder Quality ignore this Talent.

Surgical Precision

Max: Strength Bonus

Tests: Intelligence Test concerning this Talent

You have mastered the art of bringing down foes non-lethally. Whenever you deal a Critical Hit to an opponent, you may instead make an Average (+20) Intelligence Test. If you succeed, you inflict +1 Fatigued Condition upon your target for each SL you scored on the Intelligence Test. Further, you gain a +40 bonus to any Heal Test to treat the wounds of your target once they've been subdued, assuming they're still alive.

Warpaint

Max: Willpower Bonus

You forsake the use of modern armor, charging into battle wearing nothing more than simple garbs and war paint. Ancient customs and beliefs grant the war paint its own means of protection. With War Paint, you gain +1 AP on all body parts for the amount equal to the Talent's level. This AP provides no additional Flaws or Qualities and cannot be Damaged or used for Critical Deflection; however, you cannot have any armor equipped in order to receive this Talent's effect.

Veteran Talents

To survive and triumph on the battlefields of the Empire requires truly exceptional individuals; men and women who stand head-and-shoulder above their peers to lead the Emperor's armies into glorious battle. It is not enough to merely know how to fire a handgun or command a unit of soldiers or knights to charge into battle; a true warrior must rise above the rank-and-file, showing themselves to be unique and exceptional. This is the role that these Talents play, advanced martial and military techniques not taught in the traditional manner through Careers, but through mud and blood, taught by the most grizzled veterans who have seen hell and back through years of fighting.

Obtaining these Talents requires the character to Consult an Expert (WHFRP Core Book, page 197) with trainers as determined by the GM to be most suitable for training the Talent: Soldiers, Knights, Pit Fighters, Witch Hunters, etc. Once the trainer has been obtained the character must follow up with an Unusual Learning Endeavour (WHFRP Core Book, page 199-200) in order to acquire these advanced combat Talents.

Ambusher

Max: Agility Bonus

Test: Melee when attacking a Surprised target

A battle is easily won if the enemy does not know they are fighting. You take this tactic to heart, striving to always seize the initiative and make the most of the element of surprise to finish fights before they truly begin. Your melee attacks against Surprised Targets gain a SL bonus equal to your levels of Ambusher.

Armor-Monger

Max: Dexterity Bonus

Test: Trade Tests for crafting and repairing armor

You are a skilled armorer, constantly tinkering and improving your armor, or keeping it in pristine shape by repairing the slightest damage it sustains. You even learned to enhance the protection afforded by your armor and how to use it optimally. Increase the Armor Points of any armor you wear by 1 on all locations it would normally cover, so long as you spend at least an hour each day to clean and repair it or make minor modifications. This bonus applies only to armor when worn by you, cannot be used for Critical Deflection (WHFRP 4E Core Book, page 299) and does not count towards the armor's durability. If your armor's durability is reduced to 0 and made useless, the AP bonus no longer applies until it is repaired.

Blind Fighter

Max: Initiative Bonus

Years of practice and development of other senses allows you to fight in close combat without the benefit of sight. This Talent reduces the penalties for fighting with a melee weapon while suffering from obscured vision, permitting you to fight in fog, smoke, or darkness more effectively. You can ignore the -10 penalty from a Blinded Condition. Each level in this Talent lets you ignore the -10 penalty from an extra Blinded Condition. Note this Talent only improves a character's chances to hit with melee weapons and has no effect on ranged weapon attacks.

Bombardier

Max: Ballistic Skill Bonus

Test: Extended Trade (Explosives) Tests

Due to many years of training, and an obsession that others might find unnerving, you are an expert with explosive weapons and have an uncanny control over where projectiles land. You double the Range you can throw explosives, and if any thrown explosive Scatters you roll twice to determine the direction and distance of the explosive and may choose either result.

Crazed Cook

Max: Dexterity Bonus

Test: Trade (Cook)

Once per game session, you may make a Challenging (+0) Trade (Cook) Test. This Action requires at least several minutes. At the GM's discretion, you might gain a bonus to this Test for acquiring certain ingredients to truly enhance your meal. If you succeed, you and your allies gain a +10 bonus to Willpower Tests to resist the effects of Fear, Intimidate and Terror for SL hours or until the end of the session. If the cooking Test succeeds by 6 SL or more, the first time each ally uses a Fortune Point before the end of the effect, that character rolls 1d10. On a result of 6+, that character still gains the benefit of using the Fortune Point, but the Fortune Point does not count as having been expended.

Creative Fighter

Max: 3

You see everything as a potential weapon and can easily kill wielding anything you can get your hands on. From chairs, to candelabums and makeshift tools, you're as deadly without a sword as you would be with one. Improvised weapons gain +1 Damage for every level of Creative Fighter. If you have this Talent thrice, you count all improvised weapons as having the Undamaging Flaw removed.

Crippling Blow

Test: Strength for Crippling Blow

You can focus your entire body into a single, brutal close combat attack. For your Action, you may attempt a Challenging (+0) Strength Test. If you succeed, and you successfully attack an opponent before the end of the next Round, you inflict a Critical Wound, ignoring Critical Deflections. You can use Crippling Blow a number of times per encounter equal to your Crippling Blow level. For every +2 SL on the Strength Test, you increase the result on the Critical Wounds Table by +10.

Guardian

Max: 1

You have developed a sense of loyalty and comradeship to your friends and allies and are even willing to trade your own life to protect others. As an Action at the start of the Round instead of on your Turn you may switch places with an ally within 2 yards, so long as there is no physical obstruction to prevent it. The ally no longer counts as Engaged during the switch. The character becomes the target of any attacks previously targeting the ally.

Hammer Swing

Max: Strength Bonus

You strike blows with such focus and force that it breaks armor and pulps flesh as it strikes. When using a single-handed melee weapon with two hands to make a single melee attack, you add +1 Strength Bonus to the attack. Any Melee (Two-handed) weapon with the Hack or Pummel Quality may also count as having the Impact Quality for a number of attacks equal to your level of Hammer Swing per day, to represent the shocking force of your blow's impacts. Any attack made using the Impact Quality in this manner after expending your daily uses requires a Very Hard (-30) Endurance Test. If failed, you receive one Fatigued Condition.

Killing Strikes

Max: Weapon Skill Bonus

With expert precision, you can land blows which defy your opponent's ability to counter, chewing through their defenses as surely as an Ogre chews through troll meat. At the start of an encounter, you may spend one Fortune Point to choose to make all your melee attacks for that Round count as having the Fast Quality. This effect lasts for a number of Rounds equal to your level of Killing Strike, though they apply to all of your attacks (i.e. such as extra attacks gained with Talents such as Dual Wielder, Frenzy or Furious Assault).

Overkill

Max: 1

You have spent enough time fighting the enemies of the Old World to know that some creatures do not die when all sense says that they should expire, and that it is better to be safe than sorry when dealing with the unknown. Once per encounter, when you hit with a ranged attack, you may make a Challenging (+0) Perception Test. If successful, you add the SL to the Ranged Test for the attack. If you have the Acute Sense (Sight) Talent, any benefits you receive from it may be applied to this Talent.

Quick Draw

Max: Dexterity Bonus

Tests: Ranged (Point Blank) with pistols

You have practiced so frequently with your weapons that they practically leap into your hands in response to a simple thought. Once per Round, you can draw and ready a one-handed weapon for free without the use of a Free Action outside of the normal Initiative sequence.

Thunderous Charge

Max: Strength Bonus

Test: Melee on a Round when you Charge

The character charges into combat using their body as an additional weapon to push foes away or to the ground. Driven by your rage and momentum, the impact of such a charge can knock a foe flying or bring them to their knees. When the character makes a Charge Action, instead of causing Damage, a successful attack can slam an opponent back 1 yard per SL by which you win the Opposed Test. If this brings them into contact with a wall or other large obstacle, they take Damage equal to the distance travelled in yards, reduced by Toughness Bonus and armor. If they collide with another creature, they take the same Damage as the initial target of the Charge. Once the target is hit, they must then make a Challenging (+0) Endurance Test or gain a Fatigued Condition, as the wind is knocked out of them. If they hit a wall or similar obstacle from the charge, the target must make a Hard (-20) Endurance Test instead.

Tireless

Max: Toughness Bonus

Through brute force of will or extreme physical resilience, you can carry on through extreme adversity and exhaustion without losing significant efficiency. You can ignore the -10 penalty from a Fatigued Condition. Each level in this Talent lets you ignore the -10 penalty from an extra Fatigued Condition.

True Grit

Max: Toughness Bonus

You can shrug off wounds that would fell lesser beings. Whenever you suffer Critical Wounds, you may make a Challenging (+0) Endurance Test. If successful, you may reduce the result of the Critical Wound by 10 per level of True Grit. This Endurance Test is often modified by the Strength behind the blow that hit you: for every +10 Strength the blow has over your Toughness, you suffer a penalty of -10 to the Endurance Test, and vice versa.

Volley Shot

Max: Ballistic Skill Bonus

Test: Ranged Tests when beside an ally with Volley Shot
You have trained extensively with your fellow marksman, ensuring that your shots are perfectly timed to inflict maximum damage upon the enemy. If an enemy causes you to lose Advantage when standing beside an active ally with the Volley Shot Talent, you may keep 1 lost Advantage for each time you've taken the Volley Shot Talent.

Divine Lore of Kislev

Dazh, God of Fire and Hospitality

Dazh's Blessings and Strictures:

Battle	Conscience	Courage	Fortune	Protection	Wit
--------	------------	---------	---------	------------	-----

- Never let a fire go out during the night. Many interpret this stricture as never leaving a fire unattended.
- Never light a fire on a dirty hearth.
- Always give hospitality to those who ask for it, even enemies. Leave none out in the cold.
- Offer sacrifices to Dazh on the first day of the winter snows, so he returns with all speed.

Miracles of Dazh

Dazh is the God of fire, the sun, and hospitality. He has been worshipped in the lands of Kislev for uncounted centuries and is believed to have taught early Ungol tribesmen the secrets of fire. Dazh is often comparable to Shallya in terms of benevolence and caring for his followers, and this attitude reflects strongly on the priests who worship him. Priests of Dazh are warm-hearted individuals who take deep pride in their hearts and homes, and many bedeck themselves in sacred gold. Those who call upon Dazh often prefer heat to cold and may feel uncomfortable when the sun sets.

Blessing of Dazh

Range: Touch

Target: 1

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: The target you touch becomes blessed with Dazh's favor. For the duration of the spell, the target has all Ablaze conditions removed, cannot gain any more and is immune to fire damage from any non-magical source of fire, including Breathe Attacks.

Brilliance

Range: You

Target: AoE

Duration: Instant

Description: Your prayers summon a blinding wave of holy fire. All creatures within range are dazzled by the fire. Affected creatures receive 1 Blinded Condition. You and a number of allies equal to your Fellowship Bonus are immune to Brilliance.

Dazh Szheg!

Range: Fellowship Yards

Target: AoE

Duration: Instant

Description: You call upon Dazh to burn his enemies, and a beam of holy light engulfs your opponents. All non-Dazh worshippers within Fellowship Bonus Yards of the area takes 1d10 Damage, ignoring Toughness Bonus and Armor Points, and receive an Ablaze Conditions. For every +2 SL you may add +1 Ablaze Condition.

Dance of the Alari

Range: Special

Target: Special

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Hours

Description: You ask Dazh to illuminate the night, and he answers with his warrior-consorts—the Alari. The northern sky lights up with eerie fires as the Alari dance. This illumination is enough light to see by when traveling in the dark.

Gift of Fire

Range: Special

Target: Special

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Hours

Description: Your prayers summon a welcoming campfire that appears anywhere within range. It does not consume any fuel, does not ignite flammable material, but does emit heat that warms living flesh and can be used to cook food, boil water and negate the effects of cold weather.

Rouse the Coals

Range: Willpower Bonus Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Instant

Description: You utter a prayer celebrating Dazh awakening from his bed of coals in the east. Your target, if flammable (as determined by the GM), immediately bursts into flames taking 1d10+Fellowship Bonus Ablaze Conditions.

Sacred Guest

Range: Touch

Target: 1

Duration: Special

Description: You invoke Dazh to bless your time as a guest in another's home. If your host abuses his position or is a poor host, Dazh curses them. The curse, which is decided by the GM, could include: fires failing to light, fires giving no heat, or fuel burning at quadruple rate. The curse lasts until the host apologizes to you or prays for forgiveness at a Temple of Dazh.

Wreath of Flame

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: Your chants wreath your body in holy flame. Anyone attempting to strike you with a handheld weapon must succeed on a Challenging (+0) Willpower Test or take a –30 penalty to their WS Skill Test as the heat drives them back from the attack. Even a successful test imposes a –10 penalty. Whilst wreath of flame is in effect, you are immune to all damage from non-magical fire.

Tor, God of War and Thunder

Tor's Blessings and Strictures:

Battle	Courage	Hardiness	Might	Savagery	Tenacity
--------	---------	-----------	-------	----------	----------

- Never stand under a tree during a thunderstorm.

Miracles of Tor

Tor is the God of thunder, lightning, and war. He is popular amongst the war-like Kislevites and was worshipped in the area long before the Gospodars arrived. The Axe of Tor is a sacred symbol among the people of Kislev, as his influence is so powerful that even towns sacked by marauders are said to have their temples dedicated to Tor perfectly intact. It is theorized that even the foul servants of Chaos dare not tempt his wrath, for his reputation as a butcher of daemons and undead is so legendary, and his followers so full of vengeful fury, that it's a guaranteed death sentence to anger the ancient war god. Priests of Tor are often taciturn and belligerent, and many wield war axes detailed in sacred silver. Those who call upon Tor can be quick to anger, and many are drawn to high locations, such as mountains or tall towers. At the GM's whim, any use of Torinyi prayers involving thunder, lightning, or rain may bring on a full storm.

Call of Tor

Range: Fellowship Yards

Target: Strength Bonus Allies

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You bellow prayers skywards, and Tor responds with a great deal of thunder. All allies in range gain the +1 Resolute Talent and may attack twice on a single Charge.

Cleave the Sky

Range: Fellowship Bonus Miles

Duration: Willpower Bonus Days

Description: You invoke Tor to cleave the sky with his mighty war axe. Clouds roil high above, and after 1d10 rounds, a heavy downpour of rain, sleet, snow, or hail (as appropriate) begins. Each round, all affected targets have their Movement halved by the terrain affected by the weather. Cleave the sky may only be attempted if the sky is already overcast.

Do Tor!

Range: Fellowship Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Instant

Description: You entreat Tor to unleash his fury, and a bolt of lightning streaks towards your target dealing 1d10 Damage, ignoring Toughness Bonus and Armor Points. Once the target is struck, the lightning arcs to a number of targets up to your Willpower Bonus within 2 yards of the initial target. For every +2 SL, you may increase the distance of the lightning arc by 2 yards from the initial target, increase the number of targets the lightning arcs to by +Willpower Bonus, or cause an extra +2 Damage to any Undead or servants of the Ruinous Powers affected.

Incoming Storm

Range: Fellowship Yards

Target: Strength Bonus Allies

Duration: Willpower Bonus Minutes

Description: Your prayers increase the tension in the air, preparing those around you for an incoming conflict. For the duration, all allies affected by Incoming Storm may attempt an Average (+20) Initiative Test to overcome any Surprise Conditions.

Thunder of War

Range: You

Target: AoE

Duration: Instant

Description: Your prayers amplify the sounds of all nearby conflicts, as the sound of thunder blasts around you for your Strength in yards, piercing the eardrums of all nearby enemies. All non-Torinyi within range gain one Deafened and Fatigued Condition. For every +2 SL, they receive +1 Deafened Condition.

Tor's Fury

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You entreat Tor to bless your axe with his divine might. When using an axe, every time you succeed in attacking an enemy with your melee weapon you automatically inflict one Critical Wound. If you roll a Critical Hit with this effect active, roll twice on the Critical Wounds Table and pick the higher result.

Wrath of Tor

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: When using an axe, energy crackles over the weapon, imbuing it with the favor of Tor. The weapon adds +Fellowship Bonus Damage, counts as magical and gains Lightning damage: Any Wounds caused ignore armor and the target must roll a Challenging (+0) Endurance test or gain a Stunned Condition. In addition, your prayers change the quality of the air, fooling sensitive animals into believing a storm is coming. Creatures with the Skittish Trait flee from you.

Ursun, God of Bears and Strength

Ursun's Blessings and Strictures:

Battle	Courage	Hardiness	The Hunt	Might	Righteousness
--------	---------	-----------	----------	-------	---------------

- Never hunt a bear in winter—let him sleep as he lets you sleep.
- Wake the bear in the spring, and feed him well before his winter rests.
- Bears must only be killed by the strength of your hand or the flight of an arrow.
- Only display the hide, claw, tooth, or skull of a bear you have killed yourself.
- Shun the comforts of indoor life whenever possible. In particular, all ablutions and bathing must be done outdoors.
- Eat fish at least once a week, as the bear does. Never eat fish and another meat on the same day, as this is wasteful.

Miracles of Ursun

Ursun is the God of bears and patron of Kislev. His cult was introduced by the Gospodars almost a thousand years ago and is now the most powerful in the land. Priests of Ursun tend to be wild individuals, and many wear sacred skins and holy bear bones. The trails to becoming a priest of Ursun are brutal, with the most famous requiring an acolyte to wrestle a bear in the woods bare handed. Those calling upon Ursun are often uncomfortable around the trappings of civilization and frequently grow lethargic in winter. It is very common for Ursun priests, especially war priests, to travel into the same forests in which they first underwent the test to becoming a priest, reacquainting with the bear they wrestled with, and through various means, bond with them making the bear a valued ally, mount and friend.

Blessing of the Licked Paw

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Instant

Description: You growl a plea to Ursun to lessen a wound's pain. The priest counts as if medical attention has been received, healing 1d10+SL Wounds and removing 1+SL Bleeding Conditions.

Blessing of Ursun

Range: Touch

Target: 1

Duration: Willpower Bonus Hours

Description: Your prayers grant the target a +20 bonus to all Navigation and Outdoor Survival Tests taken in forests, mountains, plains or caves.

Father Bear

Range: Fellowship Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Special

Description: Your prayer stirs one of Ursun's servants. One bear within range will not attack unless attacked and will answer any questions you pose it, drawing from its own knowledge (not Ursun's). Its voice is sonorous and noble, and it speaks in the mother tongue of the priest. Once it has answered all of your questions, it will return to the forest. If required, it will fight by your side to the death and return to the forest once the battle has ended.

Growling Fury

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: Your chants fill you with implacable, ferocious rage. You gain the +1 Battle Rage Talent and gain the Frenzy Psychology.

Skin of the Ice Bear

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: Your prayers draw an Ice Bear's spirit within you. For the duration, your melee attacks deal +1 Damage and you gain +1 AP on all locations. In addition, you receive the +1 Acute Senses (Smell) and the +1 Resistance (Cold) Talents.

Ursine Strength

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: Your chant grants you some of Ursun's strength. You gain a +20 bonus on all Melee (Brawling) Tests, +1 Strong Back Talent and the Big Trait as your muscles bulge. So great is your strength that grappling tests with Size (Large) creatures no longer require a Critical Success for Opposed Strength Tests.

Unyielding Ursun

Range: Fellowship Yards

Target: Strength Bonus Allies

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: Your rousing prayers tap deep into Kislevite national pride. All Kislevites and party members within range gain the +1 Fearless (Everything) and +1 Unshakeable Talents.

Winter's Sleep

Range: You

Target: AoE

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: Your prayers bring the deep sleep of winter upon your enemies. All living creatures for Fellowship Bonus Yards, aside from the priest, must succeed on an Average (+20) Will Power Test or fall into a deep sleep and receive the Unconscious Condition. Targets affected by this spell cannot be awakened until the end of the Miracle's duration.

Lore of Ice

Ice Magic, also known as the Lore of Ice, is Kislev's oldest magical tradition, dating back many centuries before the Empire founded the Colleges of Magic under Magnus the Pious, and exclusively wielded by women of Kislev sensitive to the Winds of Magic. Before invading Kislev in 1497 IC under the Khan-Queen Miska, the first Ice Witches practiced their magic on the Endless Steppe. Unlike their former brethren, the Hung and Kurgan—who worshipped the Great Eye after falling to Chaos—the Gospodars learned to tap the cold power coursing through the land itself, establishing a relationship not too dissimilar with the Jade Order and their ties to nature. The ice witches of Kislev are more than just women with the ability to channel the Ancient Widow's cold flows; they are an organized sisterhood who works together to achieve shared goals under the orders of the Tzar/Tzarina of Kislev. Although this magic does not carry the same risks of mutation as magics of Chaos, it is very difficult to control and often kills unwary and inexperienced Witches. Many centuries later, things are little different. As should be expected for a magic with its roots in wars on the Endless Steppe, Ice Magic is deadly and extremely so, not just for the Witches' enemies but for the Witches themselves. Many apprentice Witches do not survive their training; indeed, some can be found to this day in isolated corners of the Oblast, frozen eternally as sparkling statues of ice by the magic they failed to control. Ice witches can often be found wearing heavy winters clothes with fur coats, capes and boots (even in hotter climates) with older and more experienced ice witches wearing crowns of ice on their heads.

Lore Attribute: The flows of Ice Magic vary in strength. By Kislev's sites of power, along her leylines, in freezing climates and in the depths of winter, Ice Magic is very strong, granting you a +10 to all Channeling and Language Magick Tests when casting the Lore of Ice. But in warmer climes, it is far weaker and wanes the closer to the equator and the further from the North one travels. When casting in warmer climates, such as in most of the Empire, it counts as if casting next to a Corrupting Influence, causing a Minor Miscalculation on a unit's roll of an 8. If you already have a Minor Miscalculation, the Miscalculation becomes a Major Miscalculation. In hotter climates, such as in a desert or jungle, you receive a permanent Fatigued Condition until you relocate to a cooler climate. You may spend a Resolve point to mitigate this Fatigued Condition for one round.

Ingredients: Ice of all types, from snowflakes, hailstones, icicles and carved ice sculptures, comprise the majority of the Lore of Ice's ingredients. While plentiful in the cold lands of Kislev, due to their frozen nature, it is potentially much more difficult to acquire or preserve these ingredients needed depending on the region, climate and time of year. However, many spells also use trappings associated with the body parts of certain wildlife within Kislev, including the claws of a frostfiend, a ball of bear fat, fangs of a white dragon or the tongue of a hawk.

Biting Wind

CN: 10

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Instant

Description: You channel mighty flows of magic into a howling gale of cold. This is a magic missile. Anyone between you and your target within 2 yards of the missile is slashed by wind-whipped ice shards dealing +6 damage. In addition, creatures that lost 5 Wounds or more from this spell gain a Stunned Condition and must pass a Challenging (+0) Endurance Test or be forced prone from the harsh winds and shards of ice blasting against them.

Blizzard

CN: 12

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: AoE Willpower Yards

Duration: Toughness Bonus Rounds

Description: A swirling flurry of snow and ice rises from the land, freezing and blinding all in its path. Distant targets may require a Perception Test to see clearly, as dictated by the GM. Those within the radius of the spell take +Willpower Bonus Damage every round, ignoring armor, and reduce their line of sight to only 6 yards. Targets also take a -20 penalty to their Ballistic Skill and Agility Tests and have their Movement reduced by half. You are immune to Blizzard. For every +2 SL you may increase the Damage of Blizzard by +Willpower Bonus.

Chill

CN: 4

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Toughness Bonus Hours

Description: Your touch leaves a gleaming frost behind. The air in the area drops to freezing temperatures for the duration, making breathe visible and turning water to ice instantly.

Chill Voice

CN: 4

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Minutes

Description: You speak with the pitiless chill of the Khan-Queens of old. Gain a +20 bonus on all Haggle, Intimidate, and Leadership Tests, but take a -20 penalty to all Charm, Entertain and Gossip Tests. If speaking to Kislevites, the penalty is ignored.

Crystal Cloak

CN: 7

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: You call forth a swirling, shimmering, ice-laden mist and wrap it around you. Anyone within Toughness Bonus yards of you takes a -10 penalty to all Weapon Skill, Ballistic Skill and Agility Tests as the cloak's cold seeps into them. Further, anything living trying to attack you in melee combat must pass an Average (+20) Endurance Test or lose their Action for next round due to the cloaks intense cold chilling them to the bone. This Test does not apply to creatures with the Undead or Daemonic Traits. For each +2 SL, you may increase the difficulty of the Endurance Test by an additional -10 up to a maximum penalty of -50.

Death Frost

CN: 7

Range: Touch

Target: 1

Duration: Instant

Description: You call up lethal cold from the land as you grip your target with chilling death. This counts as a magic missile with a Damage of +6 that ignores Toughness Bonus and Armor Points. For every 5 Wounds inflicted, your Target receives +1 Stunned Condition. If the target's Wounds are reduced to 0 its body freezes and turns into a solid statue made of ice, a grizzly representation of its former self.

Frost Blade

CN: 5

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: A sparkling blade of ice forms in your hand, taking any shape you wish. It counts as a magic weapon with a Damage equal to your Willpower Bonus+3. Enemies that lose 5 Wounds or more from each strike gain +1 Stunned Condition. The blade immediately melts away if you let go of it or once the duration ends.

Form of the Frostfiend

CN: 16

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Special

Description: You invite the cold spirits of old within you to transform yourself, along with your trappings, into a shrieking, taloned Frostfiend. You retain your Weapon Skill, Ballistic Skill, Intelligence and Willpower, but all other Attributes and Traits are that of a Frostfiend's—a large bat-winged creature with white fur native to Kislev. Your claw attacks count as having the Hack Quality. However, you may not communicate in anything other than howls, cannot cast spells, and cannot wield weapons. Form of the Frostfiend ends when you take a Critical Wound, go to sleep, or when you end the spell voluntarily. For every +3 SL you may add an additional creature Trait to your Frostfiend form.

Frostfiend:

M	WS	BS	S	T	I	Ag	Dex	Int	WP	Fel	W
6	60	0	55	45	30	65	35	30	85	15	42

Traits: Armor 3, Bite +8, Dark Vision, Fear 2, Immunity (Cold), Size (Large), Flight 60, Strider (Snow), Weapon +9

Optional: Big, Distracting, Frenzy, Fury, Hardy, Size (Enormous), Tough

Hailstorm

CN: 7

Range: Toughness Yards

Target: AoE Willpower Bonus Yards

Duration: Toughness Bonus Rounds

Description: You channel Ice Magic upwards, forming large chunks of ice that fall to the ground with horrifying speed. This counts as a magic missile dealing +Willpower Bonus Damage at the beginning of each round. All targets within the radius take a -20 penalty to all Ballistic Skill Tests and halve their Movement. While the spell is in effect, the ice witch may attempt a Channel Test and, if successful, may move the Hailstorm 2 yards per SL.

Hawks of Miska

CN: 9

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: AoE Willpower Bonus Yards

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: By calling upon pacts sealed by the first Khan-Queens, you summon the Hawks of Miska, frozen spirits of fear, hatred, and dread. The icy birds crystallize from the air and swoop around the targets, loosing fearful cries. All creatures in the area must pass a Fear 1 Test every round the spell is active or until they fail. For every +2 SL you may increase the Fear Rating by 1.

Ice Maiden's Kiss

CN: 6

Range: Toughness Bonus Yards

Duration: Instant

Description: You breathe forth purest cold, freezing foes into glittering statues of ice. You immediately make a Cold Breath attack, as if you had spent 2 Advantage to activate the Breath Creature Trait (see page 338). Ice Maiden's Kiss is a magic missile with a Damage equal to your Toughness Bonus, ignoring armor. If the target's Wounds are reduced to 0 its body freezes and turns into a solid statue made of ice, a grizzly representation of its former self. For every +2 SL you may increase the width of the Breath Attack around the target by +Strength Bonus Yards.

Ice Sheet

CN: 6

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: AoE Willpower Bonus Yards

Duration: Willpower Minutes

Description: You glaze an area of the ground in front of you with a thin layer of slippery ice. Those in the area must succeed on a Difficult (-10) Athletics Test every time they attempt to move across it, or they slip and fall, going prone, and losing their Action. A success means the character can act normally but at half Movement.

Permafrost

CN: 10

Range: You

Target: AoE Toughness Yards

Duration: Toughness Bonus Days

Description: You channel mighty flows of cold into the land. A heavy frost immediately crusts over every affected surface turning it into snowy terrain and making movement past Walking speed impossible. After casting, on this round only, anyone affected by the sudden chilling cold must succeed on a Hard (-20) Endurance Test or gain a Stunned Condition. After one minute, all water in the area freezes and snow begins to form around the affected area. You are immune to Permafrost.

Shardstorm

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: Special

Duration: Instant

Description: You unleash diamond-hard shards of ice at a single target, in an amount of shards equal to your Toughness Bonus. Each shard is a magic missile dealing +3 Damage to a single enemy. For every +2 SL you may summon an additional shard to fire at your target.

Shoika's Call

CN: 16

Range: Toughness Yards

Target: AoE Toughness Yards

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: You call out to the Ancient Widow, reminding her of her promises to Khan-Queen Shoika, first Tzarina of Kislev, and cause 20-foot tendrils of ice to erupt from the ground. All creatures in the area has their Movement halved and must succeed a Challenging (+0) Athletics Test each round or the tendrils wrap around them dealing SB+4 Damage that ignores armor and count as having the Constrictor Creature Trait. The tendrils count as having a Weapon Skill equal to yours and Strength equal to your Intelligence Characteristic.

Walk the Endless Steppe

CN: 5

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Toughness Bonus Hours

Description: You lower the temperature of your body. You are completely immune to damage from non-magical cold, including the breath attacks of monsters, and ignore any Stunned Conditions you receive. You receive the Ward (9+) Creature Trait (page 343) against magical cold attacks including spells from the Lore of Ice.

Wall of Ice

CN: 6

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: AoE (Special)

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: You form a wall of snowy ice from the ground. The ice wall is Willpower Bonus yards wide, Intelligence Bonus yards tall and 2 yards deep. For every +2 SL you may extend the length of the ice wall by +Willpower Bonus yards. You may not pass through an area emanating any warmth (living bodies, fire, and similar, as dictated by the GM). The wall blocks line of sight and has TB 5, and 10 Wounds times your Toughness Bonus. Fire deals double Damage to the ice wall.

CN: 3

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: 1 Day

Description: You demand the winter spirits grant you passage. You take no Movement penalty in the snow or on ice and are immune to the negative effects and penalties from cold weather including blizzards during travel.

Lore of the Desert

The Lore of the Desert is the dominant form of magic within Araby, with its Magicians held in high regard within its social class. The Lore of the Desert is considered a difficult Wind to perceive and manipulate, appearing scattered even to those skilled with the Sight, resembling a chaotic sandstorm as it swirls around them. This makes it tricky to manipulate but dangerous in the hands of a skilled Magician. The wind is associated with power, intelligence, and prestige. The Magicians of Araby are acclaimed for their skill, knowledge, and their sheer determination, even able to bend the wills of the Djinn, magical being of the elements, to their service. Spells from the Lore of the desert are some of the most bizarre, including summoning desert sands even in areas of the world where it is impossible, and those that summon Djinn to the mortal plane. There are also more manipulative applications used to fool enemies by summoning mirror images of their deepest desires, such as piles of gold, or even copies of yourself making it impossible for them to confront you. Magicians of the Lore of the Desert tend to wear fine silk robes known as "thawbs" in Araby accompanied by a traditional headwrap known as a "keffiyeh". Due to their higher status within the Arabyan hierarchy, Magicians rarely dress the same--dyeing their robes in exotic colors and having them designed with eccentric and unique patterns that reflect their personality, favoring fashion over practicality. Those with the money to do so flaunt their wealth with glittering jewelry hanging from their necks, and fine bangles and rings across their arms and fingers.

Lore Attribute: Arcane Spells summoned from the Lore of the Desert tend to summon or shift large amounts of dust and sands upon their targets or shroud the caster in whirling sands like a desert storm. Whenever a spell from the Lore of the Desert is cast upon a target, that target has their Movement reduced by -1 and cannot Charge for the duration of the round.

Ingredients: Magicians of the Lore of the Desert use many artefacts associated with the harsh arid lands of Araby, supplemented by crystals, glass jars, gemstones, lamps and small statues depicting the mystical beings known as Djinn. White candles, silver carvings, and bleached paper are also common.

Curse of the Djinn

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Intelligence Bonus Days

Description: The magician channels the immense power of the Djinn through their own body and lays a terrible curse upon their foe as their energy is sapped and their armor fails to protect them. The target suffers a penalty of -10 to all Tests, in addition to any other modifiers, and may not spend Fortune points. In addition, any of the target's non-magical weapons and armor begin to fail them as they break, crack and turn to dust on impact from the next time they're struck if the curse is not dispelled.

Dancing Scimitar

CN: 6

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: The magician summons a swirling, flaming scimitar that attacks their enemies. This spell is a magic missile that deals +8 Damage. Any enemy struck gains +1 Ablaze Condition. Any Undead struck take additional +Intelligence Bonus Damage and are knocked prone. For each +2 SL, the missile may inflict an additional +1 Ablaze Condition on the target.

Flying Servant

CN: 6

Range: Willpower Bonus Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Hours

Description: With a rug, rope, broom or carpet, you animate an object capable of taking you to great heights. For the duration of the spell, you gain the Flight 60 Creature Trait as you ride across the skies on your newly animated servant. The animated object has Wounds and carrying Encumbrance equal to 10 + Willpower Bonus with a Toughness Bonus equal to your Intelligence Bonus. Once the object's Wounds reach 0, it becomes inanimate again, and if you are flying while this happens you fall. For every +2 SL you may increase the Wounds and carrying Encumbrance of the animated object by +Willpower Bonus.

Mirage

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: Special

Duration: Intelligence Bonus Minutes

Description: You summon a clone of yourself to fool your enemies, confusing them with your illusory magics. You may create one clone per cast and one additional clone per +2 SL. You will automatically fool anyone without the Second Sight Talent. Those with that Talent must pass a Difficult (-10) Perception Test to notice the illusion. This does not let them see through the spell. They must dispel it to do so. During combat, illusory clones may attack or defend as if they are real, sharing your Weapon Skill and appropriate Melee Skills, but cannot deal or receive Damage. Clones may still help grant an outnumbering bonus against their enemies. Those engaged with the illusion must attempt a Hard (-20) Willpower Test to resist its effects or else treat it as if it is real and act accordingly, regardless if they are aware it's an illusion or not.

Sand Blast

Range: Willpower Bonus Yards

Target: AoE Willpower Bonus Yards

Duration: Instant

Description: A blasting sandstorm erupts from the magician's mouth, throwing those who stand before them onto the ground and covering them in sand. This spell is a magic missile that deals +6 Damage ignoring armor. Any target struck gains a Blind Condition and must attempt a Challenging (+0) Endurance Test or be knocked prone.

Sandstorm

CN: 10

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: AoE Willpower Yards

Duration: Intelligence Bonus Rounds

Description: You command the desert spirits to engulf your enemies in a swirling cloud of choking sand and dust. Anyone trapped within Sandstorm's radius, besides the caster, receives a -30 penalty to all Perception Tests, cannot see past 4 yards in front of them and cannot use missile weapons as the whirling sands make it impossible to aim and fire properly. For each +2 SL, the caster may make one ally immune to the effects of Sandstorm for the duration the spell is active.

Summon Djinn

CN: 12

Range: Willpower Bonus Yards

Target: Special

Duration: Willpower Bonus Hours

Description: You channel through the winds briefly forcing into your service a mighty ally. A Djinn immediately manifests. Perform an Opposed Channel/Willpower Test with the Djinn. If successful, the Djinn will respond to any commands issued by the caster, then vanish once the duration ends. If failed, the Djinn immediately turns on its master and must be destroyed. For every +2 SL you may add an additional Optional Trait for the Djinn prior to its manifestation; however, the Djinn will maintain these Traits even if it turns against you. The element the Djinn is manifested from is determined randomly and gains attributes based on the results. Roll a d10 and refer to the table below for the type of Djinn summoned:

Roll	Djinn Element: All Lore Effects apply when casting.
1	Light: Gains the Impact Quality for all physical attacks against Daemons.
2	Metal: Gains +5 Armor Points.
3	Life: Gains the Regenerate Trait.
4	Heavens: Gains the Breath +5 Lightning Trait.
5	Shadow: Gains the Breath +5 Smoke Trait.
6	Death: Gains the Impact Quality for all physical attacks against Undead.
7	Fire: Gains the Breath +5 Fire Trait.
8	Beast: Gains the Frenzy Trait.
9	Ice: Gains the Breath +5 Frost Trait.
10	Dhar: Gains the Terror (3) Trait.

Sun Spear

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: Special

Duration: Instant

Description: Bright beams of burning energy leap from the magician's eyes and scythe through all before them. This is a magic missile with a Damage of +12. It strikes the first creature in its path. If the target suffers any Wounds, also inflict +1 Ablaze Condition, after which the spear continues its path, striking each target in the same manner, but at -1 Damage each time. If the spear fails to inflict any Wounds, its progress is stopped, and the spell comes to an end. The Sun Spear only inflicts the minimum 1 Wound (see page 236) on the first target it strikes.

Quicksand

CN: 10

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: AoE Willpower Bonus Yards

Duration: Intelligence Bonus Rounds

Description: The magician causes the ground to sink beneath the targets as a pit of quicksand appears, slowly bringing them to their doom. Any targets hit by Quicksand have their Movement halved and must roll a Hard (-20) Athletics Test or be knocked prone so long as they remain within the spell's radius. Those affected may retake the test at the end of each subsequent Round to remove the Prone Condition. After the duration ends, the targets must then roll an additional -20 Agility Test or be sucked in by the quicksand to their deaths. The target must be a Size (Large) creature or smaller. This spell requires sufficient terrain in order to function, such as sand or soil.

Djinn

Djinn is the name given by Arabyan Magicians to many kinds of elemental spirits, which can be imprisoned within magical jars and bound to do a sorcerer's bidding or summoned to the battlefield through powerful sorcery. Such spirits will often obey only a single command before dissipating into the ether, free to go about its business or seek revenge as it sees fit. However, whilst it remains bound to the Magician's service, the spirit will fight with every ounce of its strength against its master's enemies. These spirits exist in many different forms and shapes based on the Winds of Magic. As such, they are considered neither good nor evil, but cross one's path and you're sure to regret it.

Divine Lore of Araby

This section is dedicated to players who wish to roleplay a Priest or War Priest of the Arabyan religion. All information is taken from unofficial fan sources. (page, 1)

Miracles of Ormazd

Although its roots go back further, scholars typically date the creation of the Cult of the Great Prophet to the 11th century IC, making it among the youngest of the major human religions. The Cult of the Great Prophet started in his home city of Martek, the birthplace of modern Arabyan Civilization, during the time of the prophet Mulhaed al-Quyat's life. He began receiving what Arabyans regard as divine revelations delivered through the god Ormazd. Afterwards he was said to have spawned the oasis' across Araby, granting fertile land and precious water to the people. Since the "War of the Death" and the destruction of Bel-Aliad at the hands of Arkhan the Black more than a thousand years prior, Araby had been a broken nation, but Mulhaed al-Quyat reunited the peoples of Araby, and through faith became the first Great Sultan. Today, despite Araby's decline after the Crusades in the 15th Century IC, the faith is held strongly. However, it is theorized by imperial scholars that the entity the Great Prophet received visions from was an even older god, perhaps one that was worshipped by another now long-lost civilization.

His holy symbol is that of a crescent moon, and it can be seen on many Arabyan standards, and even the shape of their shield; something that his worshippers believe will bless them in battle.

Blessings and Strictures of Ormazd:

Battle	Courage	Grace	Protection	Tenacity	Wisdom
--------	---------	-------	------------	----------	--------

- There are no gods equal to Ormazd.
- Pray facing Martek three times each day to Ormazd: at dawn, two hours past midday, and two hours past sunset.
- Donate a fixed portion of your income to believers in need. Many rulers and wealthy Arabyans build temples, drinking fountains, hospitals, schools, and other institutions both as a religious duty and to secure the blessings associated with charity.
- During the daylight hours of the ninth month of the Imperial Calendar, all healthy adult Arabyan believers are required to abstain from food and drink. Through this temporary deprivation, they renew their awareness of and gratitude for everything the Great Prophet has provided in their lives.
- Every Arabyan believer whose health and finances permit it must make at least one visit to the holy city of Martek per year.
- Vanquish all undead—in memory of Bel-Aliad.

Burning Sands

Range: You

Target: AoE Fellowship Bonus Yards

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You call on Ormazd to scour the battlefield of heretics, and a rapidly swirling wind of flaming sand bursts forth around you. Every non-believer of Ormazd within your radius receives 1 Ablaze and Blinded Condition and takes 1 Damage, ignoring armor and Toughness, at the end of each turn so long as they remain in the sand swarm. For every +2 SL, they receive +1 additional Damage at the end of each turn.

Bury the Soul

Range: Fellowship yards

Target: 1

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: You implore Ormazd to bury your foes. Your targets' lungs continuously fill with sand while the Miracle is active, pouring out of their mouth, nose and ears. Your target is Deafened and cannot speak; moreover, the target gains a Fatigued Condition and is subject to the rules for Suffocation (page 181) while the Miracle is in effect.

Forgiveness of Al-Alnon

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Instant

Description: Prostrating on the ground, you chant one of the Great Prophet's prayers to Ormazd and beg him to forgive your sins and purge you of chaotic influence. Lose 1 Corruption point and 1 Sin point you have received within Fellowship minutes. For every +2 SL you may remove an extra +1 Corruption or Sin point gained. You may not invoke this Miracle if you have committed acts deserving of condemnation from your deity (GM's discretion) outside of miscasts or corrupting influences.

Healing Sands

Range: Fellowship Yards

Target: 1

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You appeal to Ormazd to grant the target the strength to endure as warm sands surround their cuts and bruises, slowly healing their ravaged flesh. The target removes any Bleeding Conditions and regenerates their Willpower Bonus in Wounds at the end of each round while this Miracle is in effect. This effect lasts until they've recovered all their Wounds.

Sword of Ormazd

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You chant a prayer of the Ormazd's might as your blade shimmers and golden flakes of glowing light float around it. If wielding a sword, it counts as Magical, deals +Fellowship Bonus Damage, and any target struck receives the Ablaze and Blinded Conditions. Any Undead struck while this Miracle is in effect take additional +Willpower Bonus Damage.

Waters of Life

Range: Touch

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You chant the Great Prophet's prayers, and water springs forth forming a glowing pool at the point where you touch. For each round in which the Miracle is in effect, you cause enough water to quench 1 person. Whomever drinks from the pool recovers Wounds equal to your Fellowship Bonus and recovers from any negative effects caused by thirst. This Miracle requires a suitable geographical location for the water to form in, such as a hole in sand or soil, or a circular rock formation in the mountains. The water must be consumed within a short amount of time after its formation or else it dissipates, even if contained in bottles or waterskins.

Divine Lore of Ind

Miracles of the Devas

Ind is a land of many mysteries, but little is more mysterious and unique as its religion. The Kingdoms of Ind is also widely known as the Land of a Thousand Gods, and for good reason. The piety on display—from the temples of marble that reach the sky to the innumerable symbols found in every household, piece of clothing and jewelry—is enough to raise an eyebrow from all but the most dogmatic of the Sigmarite, Myrmidian and Ulrician faiths. The Indan religion is one of polytheism, worshipping not one but numerous gods (or ‘Devas’ as the people of Ind call them) at once, each representing a different aspect of the religion’s teachings. While the idea of practicing the faith of multiple gods isn’t new, it’s the equal worship of the Divine Trinity (Brahmir, Vaishna and Shaivi) and their children that makes them unique. Unlike the Empire that squabbles between its own faiths—such as the Cult of Sigmar and Ulric—the people of Ind worship under a unified pantheon. Some gods fall into greater favor than others, but it is extremely rare to find sects dedicated to only one or a few gods and excluding the rest of the pantheon. Priests the Divine Trinity can be found wearing long, colorful robes with markings on their foreheads. They are known to be kind and understanding individuals, wise men and women highly educated and sought after for advice. Their war priests are a different beast altogether: War Priests of Ind are said to be giants of men and women, avatars of their gods sent to punish the wicked and purge Ind of corruption. They are clad in armor and wear massive turbans called dastaar which are covered in religious symbols of the various gods and are said to grow larger as the war priest gains experience. Some dastaar can weight up to 50 kg from the sheer amount of charms and trophies of war placed in them.

Blessings and Strictures of the Devas:

Battle	Fortune	Healing	Protection	Recuperation	Wit
--------	---------	---------	------------	--------------	-----

•Brahmir, the Deva of Creation: Do not harm cows as they represent life given from the Devas. They are a source of goodness and its milk nourishes all creatures.

•Vaishna, the Deva of Preservation: Protect your lands, people and family at all cost. Do not allow the corruption of the Dark Ones to poison the minds of the innocent.

•Shaivi, the Deva of Destruction: Seek out and destroy the chaos of the world: the Greenskin, the Heathens, the Ratmen and Dark Ones—all must burn so creation may flow.

Avatar of Vaishna

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You channel the heavenly wrath of Vaishna into your very soul and become the embodiment of The Preserver itself. Your eyes glow and your skin changes blue. You gain the Elite Trait and you’re Immune to Psychology so long as you’re protecting something of great importance. When the Miracle’s duration ends you return to normal and are unconscious until next sunrise, as the strain of wielding such godly power is great.

Banish the Wicked

Range: Touch

Target: 1

Duration: Instant

Description: You chant a prayer to Shaivi and strike your foe with your palm punishing them for their wicked deeds with the energy of the Deva of Destruction itself. You deal 1d10+SL Damage ignoring Toughness Bonus and Armor Points. If the target has the Corruption Trait, it takes an additional 1d10 Damage per the strength of the Corruption.

Brahmir’s Gift

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: Fellowship Bonus Allies

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: You call for the Creation Deva to heal the land and allow life to flow. For the duration of the Miracle, any allies in direct contact with the earth within range heal Wounds equal to your Willpower Bonus at the start of every Round. However, this act of altruism comes at a cost. For each round this Miracle is in effect you lose 1 Wound.

Dance of Flame

Range: Willpower Yards

Target: Willpower Bonus Allies

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You dance in the name of the Deva of Fire, Agni, as flames circle around you and your companions, inspiring your allies and heating their blood in the process. You and your allies gain the Corrosive Blood Trait. You and your allies are immune to each other’s Corrosive Blood Damage.

Gilgadresh’s Fortune

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Special

Description: You bow your head and pray to the elephant-headed Deva, Gilgadresh, for good fortune and new beginnings. Gain +1 Fortune point. For every +2 SL you may gain an extra +1 Fortune point, which may take you beyond your normal maximum. You may not invoke this Miracle again until you reach 0 Fortune points.

Idran’s Will

Range: Willpower Bonus Miles

Target: Special

Duration: Willpower Bonus Minutes

Description: You invoke Idran, King of Heaven, rain and lightning to shower the land in his name. Roiling clouds are summoned high above, and after 10 - Fellowship Bonus rounds, a heavy downpour of rain begins. During the downpour, you may roll additional Pray Tests to summon a bolt of lightning down on one foe dealing 1d10+Fellowship Bonus Damage ignoring armor.

Sweat of Creation

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Willpower Bonus Rounds

Description: You reach out to Brahmir praying for the Deva’s protection. In return your body begins to sweat profusely, closing your wounds and invigorating you. You gain the Regenerate Creature Trait. When the Miracle ends, gain +1 Fatigued.

Trident of Shaivi

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Description: You call out to the Deva of Destruction conjuring their trident made of pure light, which can be wielded in combat, using the Melee (Polearm) Skill. It acts like a normal polearm with a with a very long range, with its Damage equal to your WPB and counts as Magical. For every +3 SL you may add a Weapon Quality to the trident.

Divine Lore of Nippon

日本語: 春齋年昌筆「岩戸神樂之起顯」、大判三枚続錦絵
By Shunsai Toshimasa, 1887

Miracles of the Orange Simca

The Orange Simca is the Goddess of the Rising Sun, Honor and War. Her followers consist primarily of the warrior clans that dominate Nippon (although many commoners worship her for protection and strength), with the warrior monks being the most fanatical of her worshippers. She is often paid tribute in silver, blooming flowers, snake bones and silks. It is said her worshippers feel a greater sense pride and vigor when basking in the sun but are somewhat melancholy and composed during the night. The monks are said to be so blessed or inspired by her holy light that they don't need to sleep, defending the innocent as their goddess rests in the heavens until the next morning.

The Orange Simca's Blessings and Strictures:

Battle	Courage	Fortune	Hardiness	Might	Righteousness
--------	---------	---------	-----------	-------	---------------

- Do not watch the sun as it sets but be prepared to see as it rises. Guard the innocent as she sleeps.
- Always ask three times for permission before accepting any gifts from the innocent, as it is a warrior's duty to protect the helpless, not to take from them.
- Always offer aid to warriors against Skaven who ask for it, regardless of political affiliation or race.
- Offer sacrifices on the first morning of every month, as tribute for a new month of light.

Gift of the Rising Sun

Range: You

Target: Area of Effect

Duration: Instant

You call on the Orange Simca to scour the battlefield of dishonorable foes, and a blinding flash of golden light bursts forth. All non—Simcans looking in your direction receive 1 Blinded Condition. For every +2 SL, they receive +1 Blinded Conditions.

Serpent's Eye

Range: Fellowship yards

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

You call on Simca to send a Divine Servant to grant you knowledge of your enemies. A spectral serpent manifests, slithering across the ground. The serpent looks like and has the capabilities of a normal snake, but cannot physically affect the world, or be harmed in any way. While the Miracle is in effect, you can see through the serpent's eyes and control its movement, surveying the battlefield and spying upon your enemies. Your Vision is acute, but you do not have access to any of your own sense-enhancing Talents such as Night Vision. While looking through the serpent's eyes, you cannot see through your own eyes, leaving you potentially vulnerable.

Bushido's Call

Range: Fellowship yards

Target: Strength Bonus allies

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Your prayers of honor instill your allies with an unbreakable courage against their foes. All allies affected receive the +1 Drilled and Fearless Talents towards any enemies engaging them in combat.

Banzai Charge

Range: Fellowship yards

Target: Strength Bonus allies

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Your prayer ignites the fires of war within your comrades. Affected targets gain the +1 Berserk Charge Talent. For Every +2 SL, you may increase Berserk Charge by an additional +1.

Shield of the Sun

Target: Strength Bonus allies

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

Your stalwart prayers channel the glow of the Orange Simca to shield your allies in glittering, gossamer strands of light, warding enemy blows. All those affected gain +1 AP on all locations.

Red Sun's Smite

Range: You

Target: You

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

If wielding a Naginata, it gains the Impact Quality, and counts as Magical.

Beacon of Sacred Might

Range: You

Target: Area of Effect

Duration: Fellowship Bonus Rounds

As you bellow prayers in Simca's name, you become infused with the holy fires of the Rising Sun. All allies with Line of Sight to you instantaneously remove all Broken Conditions, and gain the Fearless Talent while the Miracle is in effect and they remain in your Line of Sight. Any servants of Chaos or Skaven within Line of Sight to you are subject to Fear 1.

Sunfire

Range: You

Target: Area of Effect

Duration: Instant

You call the power of the Orange Simca to smite servants of the dark gods, children of the Horned One and those tempted by black magics. The holy fire of the Rising Sun explodes from your body blasting outwards for Fellowship Bonus yards. All targets within range take 1d10 Wounds ignoring Toughness Bonus and APs. Targets with the Skaven, Undead and Daemon Creature Traits also gain the Ablaze Condition. For every +2 SL, you may increase the area of effect by +Fellowship Bonus yards, or cause an extra +2 Damage to any Skaven, Undead, or servants of the Ruinous Powers affected.

Armory of the Empire

“Gunpowder Weapons are amongst the most powerful arsenal of weapons ever invented. The Old World is currently in a revolution of sorts. The Dwarfs introduced gunpowder, also known as black powder, with their devastating cannon. When used on the battlefields, most leaders quickly learned, despite its obvious flaws (unreliability for instance), that gunpowder was far superior to the old ways of fighting wars. Armor was virtually useless, as cannon dealt impressive damage, capable of shredding soldiers with a single blast of grape shot, or toppling walls with cannonballs. At first, these weapons were simple cannon, but soon smaller varieties were developed, allowing individual soldiers to use them. As Nuln engineers refined the process, they devised handheld firearms, repeating pistols, and more. Though there were several early and impressive advances, the technology is still experimental and costly, and few warriors are willing to risk themselves and pay the expense of acquiring such weapons.”—Warhammer Wiki

Bandolier

A bandolier is a shoulder-belt with loops or pockets for storing ammo. Bandoliers are more often used by gunners as their convenience allows them to more quickly and easily reload readily prepared ammo.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons and Crossbows.

Availability: Common.

Cost: 9 Silver Shillings.

Effect: Adds 3 Encumbrance for storing ammunition and gives +1 SL to any Extended Test to reload a ranged weapon.

Breech-Loader

Thanks to recent advances in firearms within the Human Engineering Guilds and less conservative Dwarf Engineers, breech-loading for firearms has entered into the market as a new and expensive way of combating reload times. Breech-loading provides the advantage of reduced reloading time, because it is far quicker to load the projectile and propellant into the chamber of a gun/cannon than to reach all the way over to the front end to load ammunition and then push them back down a long tube—especially when the projectile fits tightly and the tube has spiral ridges from rifling.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Exotic.

Cost: 10 GC.

Effect: A ranged weapon with a breech-loader may perform an Extended Test to reload as a Free Action. However, if you do this, you may not attempt another reload this Turn.

Bayonet

A bayonet is a knife, sword, or spike-shaped weapon designed to fit on the end of the muzzle of a rifle, musket or similar firearm, allowing it to be used as a spear.

Applies to: Pistols and 2-Handed Crossbows and Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Common.

Cost: Varies.

Effect: A bayonet removes the Undamaging Flaw for any ranged weapon that is being used as an Improvised Weapon during melee combat with the weapon's Damage equal to SB + Damage depending on the weapon selected. Its Reach varies depending on the length of the weapon equipped (a pistol with a dagger attached can reasonably be assumed to have a Very Short Reach, while a Handgun with a sword attachment can be a Long Reaching weapon in melee). If the GM wishes, the Melee (Polearm) or Melee (Two-handed) Skill may be required to effectively use a 2-Handed ranged weapon with a bayonet.

Dragon's Breathe Shot

Experimentation between the Engineering Guilds and the Alchemists of the Gold Order have created a devastating concoction for firearms. Incinerating and melting the flesh off any enemy of the Empire, the Dragon Breathe Shot is a deadly addition to any gunpowder enthusiast who enjoys blasting down swarms of cretins with the well-placed spread of a blunderbuss.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Exotic.

Cost: 1 GC per small shot and powder.

Effect: Adds the Incendiary effect to the standard Small Shot and Powder (WHFRP 4E Core Book, page 295-296).

Dwarfen Gunpowder

The Dwarfen Engineer and Gunsmith Guilds were the first to perfect the art of gunpowder long before the Empire standardized the use of firearms in its military. Dwarfen gunpowder is the best quality one can find within the Empire and it is said to be the key secret behind the Dwarf's higher reliability in the use of Blackpowder weaponry, reducing misfires and other mishaps by a noticeable degree. All attempts to recreate it within the Human Engineering Guilds have failed, much to the humor of the Dwarfs.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Rare.

Cost: 1 GC and 10 Silver Shillings for 12 Shots Worth or 6 GC for one Bomb.

Effect: Weapons using Dwarfen gunpowder ignore the Dangerous Flaw, if they have it, and increase their Damage by +1.

Extended Barrel

Since the creation of the Hochland Long Rifle, major progress has been made in the production of longer and larger gun barrels to further extend the range of firearms across the Empire. However, due to their substantial increase in material cost and weight, barrel extensions are far from being fully standardized within the Empire's armies.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Rare.

Cost: 8 GC.

Effect: A weapon with an extended barrel increases its Range by 50% and its Encumbrance by 1.

Grenade Launcher Modification

While the Grenade Launcher Blunderbuss is its own separate weapon exclusive to the imperial arsenal, the Engineering Guild has adapted its design into a permanent modification for the common blunderbuss allowing it to fire explosives from a safe but effective distance. While still highly experimental and quite costly, it is a far cheaper, if inferior, alternative to its much bigger and more powerful cousin.

Applies to: Blunderbusses.

Cost: 20 GC.

Effect: A ranged weapon with the Grenade Launcher Modification may shoot Bombs as ammunition instead of the blackpowder and engineering ammunition listed (WHFRP 4E Core Book, pages 295-296). The Damage and Weapon Qualities of the weapon are replaced with the Bomb's and its Encumbrance is increased by 2.

Gromril Coated Bullets

Gromril is the toughest and sturdiest metal in the world and is forged into the best and hardest swords, axes and armor. Coating common bullets with a thin layer of carefully applied liquid Gromril, Dwarf Engineers and alchemists of the Gold Order have perfected its use amongst munitions, creating the deadliest bullets known within the Old World.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Exotic.

Cost: 2 GC per bullet.

Effect: Adds the Impact Weapon Quality and +3 Damage to the standard Bullet and Powder (WHFRP 4E Core Book, page 296). Gromril bullets do not break, bend, pancake or shatter after being fired and may be recollected for future use.

Laurelorn Maple Wood Frame

Logging operations within Laurelorn Forest by both Nordlanders and Middenlanders have produced higher quality materials for the construction of lighter and more durable ranged weaponry. Due to its high demand, and heavy oversight with strict logging regulations dictated by the native Wood Elves within Laurelorn Forest, this material is incredibly hard to obtain by normal means.

Applies to: Ranged Weapons.

Availability: Exotic.

Cost: 10 GC.

Effect: A ranged weapon made using Laurelorn Maple gains the Durable and Lightweight Qualities.

Musket Rest

Musket rests are portable forked poles that may be set up to support the barrel of a blackpowder longarm, such as a blunderbuss, a Hochland long rifle or a repeater handgun.

Applies to: 2-Handed Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Scarce.

Cost: 1 GC.

Effect: A musket rest makes the weapon easier to aim (+10 to hit) but requires an Action to place the weapon in the rest after reloading. This item weighs 1 Encumbrance if carried.

Octagon Multi-Barrel

Major advancements technology has led to the creation of this highly cumbersome but extremely effective overhaul for the Repeater Rifle and Pistol. Increasing its maximum firepower capabilities by double, the Octagon Multi-Barrel increases the number of available rounds up to 8. Moreover, this barrel adds an additional firing mode, allowing the Repeater to serve a dual purpose as an effective single-shot weapon and as a devastating crowd clearer.

Applies to: Repeater Rifle and Pistol.

Cost: 10 GC.

Effect: A ranged weapon with an Octagon Multi-Barrel gains the Repeater 8 Weapon Quality and Reload 10 Flaw. However, the Encumbrance of the weapon will be increased by 1. As an Action, with this attachment the user can fire all its available shots at once on a single target: This Action adds the Blast Weapon Quality for an amount of ranks equal to every 2 bullets shot, up to a maximum Blast 4 Weapon Quality. Every time it is fired in this manner, the user must make an Average (+20) Endurance Test, suffering 1 Wound for each level of Failure as the weapon kicks violently against the shoulder. On an Astounding Failure, the user takes a Critical Hit to the shoulder: use the Arm Critical Wound Table (WHFRP 4E Core Book, pages 175–176), adjusting details as necessary to reflect a shoulder hit.

Pistol Grip

Pistol grips for rifles and crossbows are simply repurposed grips attached to the underbarrel to increase the stability and improve the aiming speed of the user.

Applies to: 2-Handed Crossbows and Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Rare.

Cost: 4 GC.

Effect: A ranged weapon with a Pistol Grip does not inflict the penalty for shooting after moving. You can take the Aim Action as a Free Action, however you must still wait until next round before applying the +20 Difficulty Modifier to your shot.

Pistol Sword

A pistol sword is a sword with a pistol or repeater attached alongside the blade. It differs from a rifle with a bayonet in that the weapon is designed primarily for use as a sword, and the firearm component is a secondary weapon designed to be an addition to the blade, rather than the sword being a secondary addition to the pistol. The two components of these weapons cannot be separated, unlike most bayonet-fixed rifles. Decades of unsuccessful testing left the pistol sword unpopular until the plans were picked up by the Engineers College. Since then it has been significantly improved upon into a reliable, if very pricey, exotic weapon.

Applies to: Swords and rapiers.

Cost: 20 GC.

Effect: A weapon with a Pistol Sword modification functions as both a melee weapon and a ranged weapon. The sidearm function of the Pistol Sword may be equipped with either a pistol or repeater pistol and works the same as the normal variant with its Damage, Range, Qualities, Flaws and appropriate Ranged Tests maintained as normal (WHFRP 4E Core Book, page 296). The melee weapon function used works the same as its unmodified variant—like the pistol function—with Damage, Reach, Qualities, Flaws and appropriate Melee Tests operating as normal. This modification allows you to use either function as if they were both being used in the same hand and does not require the use of a Free Action to switch between the two functions for use.

Powder Horn

A powder horn is a container for gunpowder and is generally created from a cow or ox horn. The term may also be used for any personal container for gunpowder, the condition being the shape must be long and curved. Powder horns serve the important purpose of keeping black powder dry and are widely common amongst hunters and soldiers using rifles. In Hochland, powder horns are noteworthy for their cultural integration with many being valued sentimental heirlooms passed every generation, and those sold being of notably higher quality both materially and visually.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Common.

Cost: 4 Silver Shillings and 6 Brass Pennies.

Effect: +1 SL to any Extended Test to reload a blackpowder ranged weapon. Powder horns also protect gunpowder from the elements, such as rain or snow.

Rifling

Since the creation of the Hochland Long Rifle and learning from the ancient gun manufacturing techniques of the Dwarfs, rifling has been slowly climbing its way as a popular method in the manufacturing of firearms within the Empire. In firearms, rifling is the helical groovings that are machined into the internal (bore) surface of a gun's barrel, for the purpose of exerting torque and thus imparting a spin to a projectile around its longitudinal axis during shooting. This spin serves to gyroscopically stabilize the projectile by conservation of angular momentum, improving its aerodynamic stability and accuracy over smoothbore designs.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Rare.

Cost: 4 GC per barrel.

Effect: A blackpowder weapon with its barrels rifled gains the Precise Quality and increases the weapon's Range by 20%.

Reinforced Rifle Frame

Reinforced rifle frames consist of the metallic components of the gun expertly crafted by master gunsmiths using heavier duty and tougher materials. Hiring Dwarfen gunsmiths, the Empire has been rapidly expanding on the usage and availability of reinforced rifle frames.

Applies to: Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Rare.

Cost: 4 GC.

Effect: A blackpowder weapon with a reinforced frame gains the Durable Quality, and has the Undamaging Flaw removed if used as an improvised weapon. If the weapon has the Bayonet attachment, the Reinforced Frame increases its Damage by +1.

Rune Tipped Bolts

Dwarfen crossbow bolts forged under the careful hand of a Runesmith are held in high value on the battlefield. Etched with powerful runes along their tips, these bolts are unmatched in their range and power. Able to pierce even the strongest of armor and fell the toughest of enemy champions, rune tipped bolts are a prized and deadly tool for any aspiring crossbowman's arsenal.

Applies to: Crossbows.

Availability: Exotic.

Cost: 1 GC per bolt.

Short-Barrel

Shorter barrels reduce the range and effectiveness of standard rifles in order to lower weight and increase their effectiveness in enclosed spaces. Short-barrels are a commonality amongst street gangs, pirates and organized crime syndicates able to afford blackpowder weaponry, due to their easier concealment and effectiveness in increased close-range skirmishes.

Applies to: 2-Handed Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Common.

Cost: 2 GC.

Effect: A weapon with a shortened barrel decreases its Range by 50% and its Encumbrance by 1, but you can use this weapon to attack in Close Combat similar to the Pistol Quality.

Silvered Weapons & Ammo

In the Old World, silver contains magical anti-Undead properties not understood fully by the scholars and wizards of the Empire. Silvered weapons are a vital component to the eradication of the Undead horrors that have long plagued the lands of the Empire and have been a standard amongst the arsenals of Witch Hunters, Vampire Hunters and experienced Bounty Hunters since the end of the Vampire Wars.

Applies to: Melee Weapons and Ranged Weapon Ammo.

Availability: Rare.

Cost: 3x the value of the weapon or ammo in silver with labor costs as determined by the GM.

Effect: Allows attacks to strike targets with the Ethereal Creature Trait and deals an additional +1 Damage to targets with the Undead Creature Trait.

Steam-Powered Gun Crank

Advances in firearms from the younger Dwarfen Engineering Guild members to combat Skaven Ratling-Guns has created the Steam-Powered Gun Crank. An attachment for the recently invented Repeater Rifle and Pistol, this device rapidly increases the fire rate of repeater weapons. Far more reliable than the Ratling-Gun, recent tests have shown surprising and positive results against enemies known for swarming tactics, such as Goblins and Skaven.

Applies to: Repeater Rifle and Pistol.

Availability: Exotic.

Cost: 20 GC.

Effect: A ranged weapon with a Steam-Powered Gun Crank may shoot twice on a single Action once it is activated. Every round as a Free Action, you must rotate the crank to activate the effect.

Telescopic Sight

Telescopic sights are repurposed telescopes adapted for the use of firearms and crossbows adding increased accuracy to every shot.

Applies to: 2-Handed Crossbows and Blackpowder Weapons.

Availability: Rare.

Cost: 5 GC.

Effect: A ranged weapon with a telescopic sight gains the Accurate Weapon Quality.

Volley Shot Modification

The Volley Shot crossbow is a recent addition to the Empire's arsenal, having seen much usage by Witch Hunters since the Vampire Wars centuries ago. Developed by Dwarf Engineers, Volley Shots crossbows are capable of firing multiple bolts in quick succession before the need to reload without a sacrifice to its range or power. This modification has the added benefit of being able to fire multiple bolts in a single shot.

Applies to: 2-Handed Crossbows.

Availability: Exotic.

Cost: 4 GC.

Effect: A crossbow with the Volley Shot Modification gains the Repeater 3 Weapon Quality and Reload 4 Flaw. However, the Encumbrance of the weapon will be increased by 1. As an Action, with this attachment the user can fire all its available bolts at once on a single target: The Ranged (Crossbow) Test is rolled as normal. On a Success, the Damage is counted as a separate hit by each bolt based on the number of bolts shot, with Toughness Bonus and armor deducting the Damage of each bolt as normal. Roll a d100 for each separate hit location.

New Qualities

Concealed

Concealed weapons are designed not to be seen, often strapped around various areas of the wielder's body under their clothing to avoid detection. If you are wielding such a weapon, no one can easily detect it on your person with their passive perception and would have to conduct a thorough investigation in order to discover it. If used on a surprised target, the weapon temporarily gains the Damaging and Impact Qualities.

Crushing

Crushing weapons are designed with spikes or patterns to smash up, crush and tear into the armor of the wielder's enemies. If you successfully attack and deal a Critical Hit on an opponent, you Damage a struck piece of armor or shield by 2 points as well as wounding the target. Furthermore, you ignore the Impenetrable Armor Quality for all Critical Hits.

Hooked

Hooked weapons are strategically designed with small hooks on their ends to pull down infantry or rip cavalry off their mounts. If you are wielding such a weapon, after a successful Melee Attack, instead of dealing Damage, you may attempt to pull down your enemy. If you choose to do this, enact an Opposed Strength Test. If you succeed, you force the opponent to go prone. If the opponent is mounted, they are forced off their mount and take falling damage.

Multi-shot

This weapon is designed to fire multiple missiles at once in a single action, assuming the weapon is fully loaded and capable of holding more than one missile at a time based on the Repeater Quality's value. On a Success, the Damage is counted as a separate hit by each bolt based on the number of shots, with Toughness Bonus and armor deducting the Damage of each shot as normal. Roll a d100 for each separate hit location. If you Fumble, you must roll for two results on the Fumble Table and pick the higher result.

Ninjutsu

This bomb is a product created from years of martial arts mastery and experimentation. A bomb with this Quality may have one of the effects selected below. Whichever effect is selected replaces the Ninjutsu Quality for the number of bombs crafted or purchased and cannot be replaced:

- Distraction: Made up of firecrackers and noise makers, these grenades are used to lure and distract enemies. Any targets within 50 yards of this bomb are immediately alerted to its presence.
- Smoke: Used to blind and surprise unaware foes, anyone caught in the radius of this grenade is Surprised and gains 1+SL Blinded Conditions.
- Stun: Used to incapacitate foes, anyone caught in the radius of this grenade must roll a Hard (-20) Endurance Test or gain 1+SL Stunned conditions.
- Poison: Used to weaken and kill targets, anyone caught in the radius of this grenade must roll a Hard (-20) Endurance Test or gain 1+SL Poison conditions.

Suppressed

This weapon is designed to drastically reduce the noise made from firing it. This weapon can be fired without immediately alerting enemies; however, it loses the Blackpowder and Damaging Qualities.

Missile Resistant

This armor is designed in such a way to protect the wearer from ranged attacks. While wearing a piece of armor with this quality, missile attacks have their Damage reduced by 2. Furthermore, the Damaging Quality of all ranged weapons is ignored when striking this armor with missile attacks, with the exception of ranged weapons with the Blackpowder Quality.

Each regiment has a wide variety of weapons for certain types of engagements, with spears, halberds, and swords being the most common and the most flexible in battle situations. Imperial regiments used as long-range support are often equipped with handguns, crossbows, and longbows, among others. When not in war, Imperial soldiers are required to drill and train on a regular basis in order to build their stamina and deepen their martial abilities when the time for combat soon reappears. Supervised by drill-sergeants, these men and women are harshly instructed in the importance of formation tactics and the need to fight as a cohesive unit capable of lending support to one another in the chaos of the battlefield.

Optional: For an even more diverse roster and to add further customization options, GMs should consider including Human starting Talents based on the Empire Provinces the Imperials of this bestiary hail from. Consult the Regiments of Renown or Knightly Order Skills and Talents for further customization. For further variety, reduce the Attributes of a unit by 10 each and roll 2d10 to determine their stats.

“Where march you, men of Reikland, where carry your halberd and sword... We march to war for our Emperor, and Sigmar our saviour and lord... Tomorrow we go to war, to face the hordes of Chaos... Tomorrow we will be buried, in cold graves that await us... And when the fighting is done, and the sun goes down at night... Hear my prayers, save my soul, and take me to Sigmar's Light...”

Brettonia Bestiary

The Bretonnian military are a powerful army formed around a core of brave knights supported by scores of low-born peasants. They are a warlike and valiant people who willingly seek out battles as a way of securing personal honor and pride. Any who invade their domains face the fury of their powerful knights and few foes can match them on open ground. The knights range from the youngest Knights Errant, eager to prove their worth, through the Knights of the Realm, defenders of the land. Rarer still are the Questing Knights, wandering warriors engaged in a quest for the Grail. And then there are the legendary Grail Knights themselves, who have succeeded in their quest and sipped from their goddess's Grail, becoming imbued with fey power and longevity. Riding into war atop the finest steeds, from mighty Warhorses to soaring Pegasi and roaring Hippogriffs, the Knights of Brettonia are warriors with few equals.

Dogs of War Bestiary

The Dogs of War, also known as the Regiments of Renown, is a polite catch-all term to generally describe Mercenaries from all across the known World, fighting on behalf of anyone willing to pay their exorbitant prices. They are drawn to places where fortunes can be won by ruthless adventures. From the lush jungles of the West to the misty isles of the East, and from the steamy swamplands of the South to the harsh snowlands of the north, the world is truly awash with rag-tag armies of sellswords who nurture the wishful dreams of loot, plunder and adventure. Although many Dogs of War ply their bloody trade to every point on the compass, the most notorious breeding-ground of mercenaries lies within the fraction war-torn city-states of Tilea in the Old World. From all the kingdoms of the Old World and many more beyond, sell-swords come towards Tilea in the tens of thousands, reassured of profitable employment and great battles to be won. Tilea is the battleground from which these gold-hungry mercenaries will ply their expertise to all those willing to pay. Yet no matter the motivation, bold armies of Dogs of War depart every few weeks from the ports of Tilea and sail off into the sunset, ready to conquer new lands and found new Kingdoms the likes of which no man have ever seen before.

Cost: Each Mercenary Company charges its own rates, some straight forward and others are bizarre and unique. These Cost rates are flat and pay for exactly one mercenary's day of service. A full week of service is 3x the listed Cost for the mercenary, however they will not ask for a portion of any loot acquired. Time is money, and these elite mercenaries have no time for simple quick jobs and scuffles, they're above that. If you wish to hire an entire Unit of mercenaries, the Cost will be multiplied by 10x, however they will not share any additional Traits purchased. To make controlling a Unit easier, add the Swarm Creature Trait to the Unit for the purposes of combat. Optional Traits may be purchased for a single mercenary and increase the GC Cost of the mercenary by 50% of their base price per Trait and an increase in their share of the loot by a percentage equal to their Initial Fellowship Bonus prior to any Traits added. Only one mercenary may have the Leader Trait.

Availability: Availability is relative to the Empire and requires a d100 roll by the GM to see if they may be hired within the territory the PCs occupy. If the PCs wish to hire a company from outside of their territory, they must write a letter with half of the required payment to the designated mercenary company and wait. Their request will take 30 + d10 Days until the PC receives an answer, meanwhile it will take 30 – Fellowship Bonus Days for the mercenary, or mercenaries, to arrive should they accept any contract with the PC. The Availability of these mercenaries is increased by 2x when in the lands of Araby, Estalia, Marienburg, The Border Princes or Tilea.

Kislev Bestiary

Standing at the very doorsteps of madness and corruption, the nation of Kislev has been, since its founding, a nation driven by warfare. Throughout the course of human history, Kislev has always bred hardy people, not only because of the harsh climate and generally infertile lands, but also due to the constant depredation by the raiders of the Northern Waste. The fiery hatred for these Men of the North is well evident, for so many years have the sons of Kislev died by their hands, with the Ungol tribes of the north bearing the greatest of this hatred. Since the founding of this mighty kingdom, Kislev has been, since its very creation, under siege by the murderous Hordes of Chaos Undivided, a kingdom that sits forever at the brink of total annihilation. Countless generations of Kislevites have fought, bled, and died in the snowy tundra of those harsh northern lands, and it is thanks to these brave Kislevite warriors that the Kingdoms of Men have managed to flourish in the south, huddled together in their warm and safe homes, whilst the Sons of Kislev fight till they draw their last dying breath.
